Under present law, the individual income tax treatment of health insurance expenses depends on the individual's circumstances. Self-employed individuals may deduct a portion of health insurance expenses for the individual and his or her spouse and dependents. The deductible percentage of health insurance expenses of a self-employed individual is 60 percent in 2000 and 2001; 70 percent in 2002; and 100 percent in 2003 and thereafter. The deduction for health insurance expenses of self-employed individuals is not available for any month in which the taxpayer is eligible to participate in a subsidized health plan maintained by the employer of the taxpayer or the taxpayer's spouse. The deduction applies to qualified long-term care insurance premiums treated as medical expenses under the itemized deduction for medical expenses, described below.

Employees can exclude from income 100 percent of employer-provided health insurance or qualified long-term care insurance.

Individuals who itemize deductions may deduct their health insurance expenses only to the extent that the total medical expenses of the individual exceed 7.5 percent of adjusted gross income (sec. 213). Subject to certain dollar limitations, premiums for qualified long-term care insurance are treated as medical expenses for purposes of the itemized deduction for medical expenses (sec. 213). The amount of qualified long-term care insurance premiums that may be taken into account for 2000 is as follows: $220 in the case of an individual 40 years old or less; $410 in the case of an individual who is more than 40 but not more than 50; $820 in the case of an individual who is more than 50 but not more than 60; $2,200 in the case of an individual who is more than 60 but not more than 70; and $2,750 in the case of an individual who is more than 70. These dollar limits are indexed for inflation.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision. However, H.R. 833, as passed by the Senate, provides an above-the-line deduction for a percentage of the amount paid during the year for insurance which constitutes medical care (as defined under sec. 213, other than long-term care insurance treated as medical care under sec. 213) for the taxpayer and his or her spouse and dependents.[49] The deductible percentage is: 25 percent in 2002, 2003, and 2004; 35 percent in 2005; 65 percent in 2006; and 100 percent in 2007 and thereafter.

The deduction is not available to an individual for any month in which the individual is covered under an employer-sponsored health plan if at least 50 percent of the cost of the coverage is paid or incurred by the employer.[50] Thus, the individual must pay for more than 50 percent of the cost of the coverage in order to be eligible for the deduction. For purposes of this rule, any amount excludable from the gross income of the employee under the exclusion for employer-provided health coverage is treated as paid or incurred by the employer; thus, for example, health insurance purchased by an employee through a cafeteria plan with salary reduction amounts is considered to be paid for by the employer.[51] In determining whether the 50-percent threshold is met, all health plans of the employer in which the employee participates are treated as a single plan. If the employer pays for less than 50 percent of the cost of all health plans in which the individual participates, the deduction is available only with respect to each plan with respect to which the employer subsidy is less than 50 percent. Cost is determined as under the health care continuation rules.

The deduction is not available with respect to insurance providing coverage for accidents, disability, dental care, vision care, or a specific disease or making payments of a fixed amount per day (or other period) on account of hospitalization. Such insurance and employer payments for such insurance are not taken into account in determining whether the employee pays for more than 50 percent of the cost of health insurance.

The deduction is not available to individuals enrolled in Medicare, Medicaid, the Federal Employees Health Benefit Program ("FEHBP"),[52] Champus, VA, Indian Health Service, or Children's Health Insurance programs. Thus, for example, the deduction is not available with respect to Medigap coverage, because such coverage is provided to individuals enrolled in Medicare.

The provision authorizes the Secretary to prescribe rules necessary to carry out the provision, including appropriate reporting requirements for employers.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2001.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement includes the provision in H.R. 833, except that the deductible percentage is 25 percent in 2001 through 2003, 35 percent in 2004, 65 percent in 2005, and 100 percent in 2006 and thereafter.

The following examples illustrate the application of the rule denying the deduction if the employer pays 50 percent or more of the cost of the coverage.

Example 1: Employee A participates in an employer-sponsored health plan. The annual cost for single coverage is $3,000, and the annual additional cost for coverage for A's spouse and dependents is $1,000. The employer pays 100 percent of the cost of individual coverage, but does not pay any additional amount for family coverage. A chooses family coverage. The total amount the employer pays for the insurance is $3,000, which is 75 percent of the total cost of the coverage ($4,000). A also purchases qualified long-term care insurance under an employer-sponsored plan, and pays for 100 percent of the cost of this coverage on an after-tax basis. The deduction is not available with respect to A's expenses for health insurance.[53]

Example 2: Employee B participates in two employer-sponsored health plans. One plan provides major medical coverage. The cost of this plan is $2,000 per year. The employer pays one-half of the cost of this plan. The second plan provides only dental insurance. The cost of the dental plan is $300 per year, which is paid by the employee. In determining whether B is entitled to the deduction, the dental plan is disregarded. Thus, the total cost of the health plans in which B participates is $2,000. The employer pays for 50 percent of this total cost. B may not deduct her share of the premium for the major medical plan, nor the cost of the dental insurance.

Example 3: Employee C participates in an employer-sponsored health plan. The cost of the plan is $4,000. The employer pays $1,000 of the cost of the plan directly, and Employee C pays the remainder of the $3,000 cost of the plan by salary reduction through a cafeteria plan. The $1,000 employer contribution and the $3,000 salary reduction contributions are all employer payments. Thus, the employer pays for the entire cost of the plan, and the deduction is not available.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000.

C. ABOVE-THE-LINE DEDUCTION FOR LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE EXPENSES (SECS. 1302 AND 1304 OF THE BILL AND NEW SEC. 222 OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

Under present law, the individual income tax treatment of health insurance expenses depends on the individual's circumstances. Self-employed individuals may deduct a portion of health insurance expenses for the individual and his or her spouse and dependents. The deductible percentage of health insurance expenses of a self-employed individual is 60 percent in 2000 and 2001; 70 percent in 2002; and 100 percent in 2003 and thereafter. The deduction for health insurance expenses of self-employed individuals is not available for any month in which the taxpayer is eligible to participate in a subsidized health plan maintained by the employer of the taxpayer or the taxpayer's spouse. The deduction applies to qualified long-term care insurance premiums treated as medical expenses under the itemized deduction for medical expenses, described below.

Employees can exclude from income 100 percent of employer-provided health insurance or qualified long-term care insurance.

Individuals who itemize deductions may deduct their health insurance expenses only to the extent that the total medical expenses of the individual exceed 7.5 percent of adjusted gross income (sec. 213). Subject to certain dollar limitations, premiums for qualified long-term care insurance are treated as medical expenses for purposes of the itemized deduction for medical expenses (sec. 213). The amount of qualified long-term care insurance premiums that may be taken into account for 2000 is as follows: $220 in the case of an individual 40 years old or less; $410 in the case of an individual who is more than 40 but not more than 50; $820 in the case of an individual who is more than 50 but not more than 60; $2,200 in the case of an individual who is more than 60 but not more than 70; and $2,750 in the case of an individual who is more than 70. These dollar limits are indexed for inflation.

In order for a long-term care contract to be qualified for purposes of the Code, the contract must satisfy certain consumer protection provisions of the long-term care insurance model act and regulations promulgated by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners ("NAIC") adopted as of January 1993. In addition, issuers of qualified long-term care contracts are required to satisfy certain disclosure requirements. An excise tax is imposed with respect to the failure to meet the applicable disclosure requirements.[54]

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision. However, H.R. 833, as passed by the Senate, provides an above-the-line deduction for a percentage of the amount paid during the year for qualified long-term care insurance for the taxpayer and his or her spouse and dependents, subject to the present-law premium limitations.[55] The deductible percentage is: 25 percent in 2002, 2003, and 2004; 35 percent in 2005; 65 percent in 2006; and 100 percent in 2007 and thereafter.

The deduction is not available to an individual for any month in which the individual is covered under an employer-sponsored long-term care plan if at least 50 percent of the cost of the coverage is paid or incurred by the employer.[56] For purposes of this rule, any amounts excludable from the gross income of the employee with respect to qualified long-term care insurance are treated as paid or incurred by the employer. In determining whether the 50-percent threshold is met, all plans of the employer providing long-term care insurance in which the employee participates are treated as a single plan. If the employer pays less than 50 percent of the cost of all long-term care plans in which the individual participates, the deduction is available only with respect to each plan with respect to which the employer pays for less than 50 percent of the cost. Cost is determined as under the health care continuation rules.

[49] The deduction only applies to health insurance that constitutes medical care; it does not apply to medical expenses. The deduction applies to self-insured arrangements (provided such arrangements constitute insurance, e.g., there is appropriate risk-shifting) and coverage under employer plans treated as insurance under section 104. Another provision of the bill provides a similar deduction for qualified long-term care insurance expenses.

[50] This rule is applied separately with respect to qualified long-term care insurance.

[51] Excludable employer contributions to a health flexible spending arrangement or medical savings account (including salary reduction contributions) are also considered amounts paid by the employer for health insurance that constitutes medical care. Salary reduction contributions are not considered to be amounts paid by the employee.

[52] This rule does not prevent individuals covered by the FEHBP from deducting premiums for health care continuation coverage, provided the requirements for the deduction are otherwise met.

[53] Under another provision of the bill, a deduction is available with respect to A's qualified long-term care insurance premiums.

[54] These provisions apply for all provisions of the Code relating to qualified long-term care contracts, not only the above-the-line deduction.

[55] The deduction only applies to insurance that constitutes medical care; it does not apply to long-term care expenses. The deduction applies to self-insured arrangements (provided such arrangements constitute insurance, e.g., there is appropriate risk-shifting) and coverage under employer plans treated as insurance under section 104. Another provision of the bill provides a similar deduction for health insurance expenses.

The provision authorizes the Secretary to prescribe rules necessary to carry out the provision, including appropriate reporting requirements for employers.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2001.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement includes the provision in H.R. 833, except that the deductible percentage is 25 percent in 2001 through 2003, 35 percent in 2004, 65 percent in 2005, and 100 percent in 2006 and thereafter.[57]

The conference agreement adds additional consumer protection provisions for qualified long-term care contracts. In order to be a qualified contract for purposes of the Code, a long-term care insurance contract must satisfy the NAIC model act and regulations relating to contingent nonforfeiture benefits, if the policyholder declines the offer of a nonforfeiture provision. In addition, the conference agreement modifies the disclosure requirements applicable to issuers of long-term care contracts by adding the NAIC requirements regarding suitability and disclosure of rating practices. The conference agreement also updates present-law references to the NAIC model act and regulations to reflect current provisions.

Effective date.—The above-the-line deduction is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000. The consumer protection provisions are effective with respect to policies issued more than 1 year after the date of enactment.

D. MEDICAL SAVINGS ACCOUNTS ("MSAS") (SEC. 303 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 220 OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

Within limits, contributions to a medical savings account ("MSA")[58] are deductible in determining adjusted gross income ("AGI") if made by an eligible individual and are excludable from gross income and wages for employment tax purposes if made by the employer of an eligible individual. Earnings on amounts in an MSA are not currently taxable. Distributions from an MSA for medical expenses are not taxable. Distributions not used for medical expenses are taxable. In addition, distributions not used for medical expenses are subject to an additional 15-percent tax unless the distribution is made after age 65, death, or disability.

MSAs are available to self-employed individuals[59] and to employees covered under an employer-sponsored high deductible plan of a small employer. An employer is a small employer if it employed, on average, no more than 50 employees on business days during either the preceding or the second preceding year.

In order for an employee of a small employer to be eligible to make MSA contributions (or to have employer contributions made on his or her behalf), the employee must be covered under an employer-sponsored high deductible health plan (see the definition below) and must not be covered under any other health plan (other than a plan that provides certain permitted coverage).

Similarly, in order to be eligible to make contributions to an MSA, a self-employed individual must be covered under a high deductible health plan and no other health plan (other than a plan that provides certain permitted coverage, described below). A self-employed individual is not an eligible individual (by reason of being self-employed) if the high deductible plan under which the individual is covered is established or maintained by an employer of the individual (or the individual's spouse).

The maximum annual contribution that can be made to an MSA for a year is 65 percent of the deductible under the high deductible plan in the case of individual coverage and 75 percent of the deductible in the case of family coverage.

A high deductible plan is a health plan with an annual deductible of at least $1,550 and no more than $2,350 in the case of individual coverage and at least $3,100 and no more than $4,650 in the case of family coverage. In addition, the maximum out-of-pocket expenses with respect to allowed costs (including the deductible) must be no more than $3,100 in the case of individual coverage and no more than $5,700 in the case of family coverage.[60] A plan does not fail to qualify as a high deductible plan merely because it does not have a deductible for preventive care as required by State law. A plan does not qualify as a high deductible health plan if substantially all of the coverage under the plan is for permitted coverage (as described above). In the case of a self-insured plan, the plan must in fact be insurance (e.g., there must be appropriate risk shifting) and not merely a reimbursement arrangement.

The number of taxpayers benefiting annually from an MSA contribution is limited to a threshold level (generally 750,000 taxpayers). If it is determined in a year that the threshold level has been exceeded (called a "cut-off" year) then, in general, for succeeding years during the 4-year pilot period 1997–2000, only those individuals who (1) made an MSA contribution or had an employer MSA contribution for the year or a preceding year (i.e., are active MSA participants) or (2) are employed by a participating employer, is eligible for an MSA contribution. In determining whether the threshold for any year has been exceeded, MSAs of individuals who were not covered under a health insurance plan for the six month period ending on the date on which coverage under a high deductible plan commences would not be taken into account.[61] However, if the threshold level is exceeded in a year, previously uninsured individuals are subject to the same restriction on contributions in succeeding years as other individuals. That is, they would not be eligible for an MSA contribution for a year following a cut-off year unless they are an active MSA participant (i.e., had an MSA contribution for the year or a preceding year) or are employed by a participating employer.

The number of MSAs established has not exceeded the threshold level.

After December 31, 2000, no new contributions may be made to MSAs except by or on behalf of individuals who previously had MSA contributions and employees who are employed by a participating employer. An employer is a participating employer if (1) the employer made any MSA contributions for any year to an MSA on behalf of employees or (2) at least 20 percent of the employees covered under a high deductible plan made MSA contributions of at least $100 in the year 2000.

Self-employed individuals who made contributions to an MSA during the period 1997–2000 also may continue to make contributions after 2000.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement extends the MSA program through 2002. The same rules that apply to the limit on MSAs for 1999 apply to 2000 and 2001. Thus, for example, the threshold level in those years is 750,000 taxpayers.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

E. DEDUCTION FOR PROVIDING LONG-TERM CARE TO HOUSEHOLD MEMBERS (SEC. 305 OF THE BILL AND NEW SEC. 223 OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

Under present law, the individual income tax treatment of health insurance expenses depends on the individual's circumstances. Self-employed individuals may deduct a portion of health insurance expenses for the individual and his or her spouse and dependents. The deductible percentage of health insurance expenses of a self-employed individual is 60 percent in 2000 and 2001; 70 percent in 2002; and 100 percent in 2003 and thereafter. The deduction for health insurance expenses of self-employed individuals is not available for any month in which the taxpayer is eligible to participate in a subsidized health plan maintained by the employer of the taxpayer or the taxpayer's spouse. The deduction applies to qualified long-term care insurance premiums treated as medical expenses under the itemized deduction for medical expenses, described below.

Employees can exclude from income 100 percent of employer-provided health insurance or qualified long-term care insurance.

Individuals who itemize deductions may deduct their health insurance expenses only to the extent that the total medical expenses of the individual exceed 7.5 percent of adjusted gross income (sec. 213). Subject to certain dollar limitations, premiums for qualified long-term care insurance are treated as medical expenses for purposes of the itemized deduction for medical expenses (sec. 213). The amount of qualified long-term care insurance premiums that may be taken into account for 2000 is as follows: $220 in the case of an individual 40 years old or less; $410 in the case of an individual who is more than 40 but not more than 50; $820 in the case of an individual who is more than 50 but not more than 60; $2,200 in the case of an individual who is more than 60 but not more than 70; and $2,750 in the case of an individual who is more than 70. These dollar limits are indexed for inflation.

[56] This rule is applied separately with respect to health insurance.

[57] See the description of the above-the-line deduction for health insurance expenses for examples of the operation of the rule denying the deduction if the employer pays for 50 percent or more of the cost of the coverage.

[58] In general, an MSA is a trust or custodial account created exclusively for the benefit of the account holder and is subject to rules similar to those applicable to individual retirement arrangements. The trustee of an MSA can be a bank, insurance company, or other person who demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Secretary that the manner in which such person will administer the trust will be consistent with applicable requirements.

[59] Self-employed individuals include more than 2-percent shareholders of S corporations who are treated as partners for purposes of fringe benefit rules pursuant to section 1372. Self-employed individuals are eligible for an MSA regardless of the size of the entity for which the individual performs services.

[60] These dollar amounts are for 2000. These amounts are indexed for inflation in $50 increments.

[61] Permitted coverage, as described above, does not constitute coverage under a health insurance plan for this purpose.

To qualify as a dependent under present law, an individual must: (1) be a specified relative or member of the taxpayer's household; (2) be a citizen or resident of the U.S. or resident of Canada or Mexico; (3) not be required to file a joint tax return with his or her spouse; (4) have gross income below the dependent exemption amount ($2,800 in 2000) if not the taxpayer's child; and (5) receive over half of his or her support from the taxpayer. If no one person contributes over half the support of an individual, the taxpayer is treated as meeting the support requirement if: (1) over half the support is received from persons each of whom, but for the fact that he or she did not provide over half such support, could claim the individual as a dependent; (2) the taxpayer contributes over 10 percent of such support; and (3) other caregivers who provide over 10 percent of the support file written declarations stating that they will not claim the individual as a dependent.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement provides taxpayers who maintain a household including one or more qualifying individuals a deduction with respect to each qualifying individual with long- term care needs, regardless of the expenses incurred in the care of the qualifying dependent. The deduction does not reduce adjusted gross income (i.e., is not "above-the-line"); however, the deduction is available whether or not the taxpayer itemizes deductions. The deductible amount is reduced by amounts received under a long-term care contract (whether or not qualified and including contracts that pay on a per diem or similar basis) covering the qualifying dependent. The deduction is phased out for higher income taxpayers in the same manner as the personal exemption amount.[62] The deduction is taken into account in determining alternative minimum taxable income.

The deductible amount is $3,000 in 2001 and increases by $1,000 each year thereafter until the limit is $10,000 in 2010 and thereafter.

An individual is a qualifying individual with respect to a taxpayer if the individual (1) is the spouse of the taxpayer or a relative of the taxpayer determined under the rules relating to the dependency exemption, and (2) lives in a household maintained by the taxpayer for the entire taxable year. In addition, if the individual is not the taxpayer's spouse or a child of the taxpayer (as determined under the dependency rules), the individual's gross income for the year must be less than the sum of the personal exemption amount, the standard deduction for a single taxpayer and, if applicable, the additional deduction for the elderly and blind.

A qualifying individual must be certified before the due date for the return for the taxable year (without regard to extensions) as having long-term care needs (as described below based on the age of the individual) for at least 180 consecutive days. Some portion of the 180-day period must fall within the taxable year. The deduction is not available unless the certification was made no more than 39-1/2 months before the due date for the return (or such other time as specified by the Secretary).

In general, an individual who is at least six years of age is considered to have long-term care needs if the individual is unable to perform at least three activities of daily living ("ADLs") without substantial assistance due to a loss of functional capacity including individuals born with a condition that is comparable to a loss of functional capacity. As under the present-law rules relating to long-term care, ADLs are eating, toileting, transferring, bathing, dressing and continence. Substantial assistance includes both hands-on assistance (that is, the physical assistance of another person without which the individual would be unable to perform the ADL) and stand-by assistance (that is, the presence of another person within arm's reach of the individual that is necessary to prevent, by physical intervention, injury to the individual when performing the ADL).

As an alternative to the two-ADL test, an individual is considered to have long-term care needs if the individual (1) requires substantial supervision to protect the individual from threats to health and safety due to severe cognitive impairment and (2) is unable to perform, without reminding or cuing assistance, at least one ADL or to the extent provided in regulations,[61] is unable to engage in age appropriate activities.

A child between the ages of two and six is considered to have long-term care needs if the child requires substantial assistance with two of the following ADLs: eating, transferring, and mobility.

A child under the age of two is considered to have long-term care needs if the child requires specific durable medical equipment (e.g., a respirator) by reason of a severe health condition or requires a skilled practitioner to address the child's condition when the parents are absent.

For purposes of the provision, a taxpayer would be considered to be maintaining a household for any period only if over one-half the cost of maintaining the household for the period is provided by the taxpayer (or, if married, the taxpayer and his or her spouse). If the taxpayer is married at the end of the taxable year, the deduction is available only if the taxpayer and his or her spouse file a joint return. An individual legally separated is not considered married. An individual is not considered married if the individual (1) files a separate return for the year, (2) maintains a household which constitutes the principal place of abode for a qualifying individual for more than one-half of the year, and (3) during the last six months of the year the individual's spouse is not a member of the individual's household.

The deduction is not available unless the taxpayer identification number of the qualifying individual is included on the taxpayer's return for the year. In addition, the deduction is not available unless the taxpayer includes on the return a physician identification number (e.g., the Unique Physician Identification Number currently required for Medicare billing). The IRS is authorized to use mathematical error procedures to deny claims for the deduction during return processing if the taxpayer does not provide valid taxpayer identification numbers and physician identification numbers.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000.

TITLE IV. PENSION AND INDIVIDUAL RETIREMENT ARRANGEMENT PROVISIONS[1]

Subtitle A. Individual Retirement Arrangements ("IRAs") (sec. 401-404 of the bill) (sec. 101 of the House bill, secs. 101-104 of the Senate amendment, and secs. 219, 408, and 408A of the Code)

PRESENT LAW

In general

There are two general types of individual retirement arrangements ("IRAs") under present law: traditional IRAs, to which both deductible and nondeductible contributions may be made, and Roth IRAs. The Federal income tax rules regarding each type of IRA (and IRA contribution) differ.

Traditional IRAs

Under present law, an individual may make deductible contributions to an IRA up to the lesser of $2,000 or the individual's compensation if neither the individual nor the individual's spouse is an active participant in an employer-sponsored retirement plan. In the case of a married couple, deductible IRA contributions of up to $2,000 can be made for each spouse (including, for example, a homemaker who does not work outside the home), if the combined compensation of both spouses is at least equal to the contributed amount. If the individual (or the individual's spouse) is an active participant in an employer-sponsored retirement plan, the $2,000 deduction limit is phased out for taxpayers with modified adjusted gross income ("AGI") over certain levels for the taxable year.

The AGI phase-out limits for taxpayers who are active participants in employer-sponsored plans are as follows:

Single Taxpayers

Taxable years beginning in:	AGI Phase-out range
2000	$32,000–42,000
2001	33,000–43,000
2002	34,000–44,000
2003	40,000–50,000
2004	45,000–55,000
2005 and thereafter	50,000–60,000

[62] The deduction is added to the taxpayer's personal exemptions for purposes of the personal exemption phaseout. For 2000, the personal exemption amount phases out over the following ranges of adjusted gross income: $193,400-$315,9000 for married taxpayers filing a joint return; $161,150-$283,650 for taxpayers filing as heads of households; and $128,950-$251,450 for unmarried taxpayers.

[61] The regulations are to be prescribed by the Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

[1] The provisions of the bill as passed by the House and the Senate did not contain provisions relating to pensions and individual retirement arrangements. Provisions described under the House bill refer to the provisions of H.R. 1102, the "Comprehensive Retirement Security and Pension Reform Act of 2000," as passed by the House. For legislative history, see H.R. Rep. No. 106-753. Provisions described under the Senate amendment refer to the provisions of H.R. 1102, the "Retirement Security and Savings Act of 2000," as reported by the Senate Committee on Finance on September 13, 2000. For legislative history, see S.Rep. No. 106-411.

Taxpayers Filing Joint Returns

Taxable years beginning in:	Phase-out range
2000	$52,000–62,000
2001	53,000–63,000
2002	54,000–64,000
2003	60,000–70,000
2004	65,000–75,000
2005	70,000–80,000
2006	75,000–85,000
2007 and thereafter	80,000–100,000

The AGI phase-out range for married taxpayers filing a separate return is $0 to $10,000.

If the individual is not an active participant in an employer-sponsored retirement plan, but the individual's spouse is, the $2,000 deduction limit is phased out for taxpayers with AGI between $150,000 and $160,000.

To the extent an individual cannot or does not make deductible contributions to an IRA or contributions to a Roth IRA, the individual may make nondeductible contributions to a traditional IRA.

Amounts held in a traditional IRA are includible in income when withdrawn (except to the extent the withdrawal is a return of nondeductible contributions). Includible amounts withdrawn prior to attainment of age 59-1/2 are subject to an additional 10-percent early withdrawal tax, unless the withdrawal is due to death or disability, is made in the form of certain periodic payments, is used to pay medical expenses in excess of 7.5 percent of AGI, is used to purchase health insurance for an unemployed individual, is used for education expenses, or is used for first-time homebuyer expenses of up to $10,000.

Roth IRAs

Individuals with AGI below certain levels may make nondeductible contributions to a Roth IRA. The maximum annual contribution that may be made to a Roth IRA is the lesser of $2,000 or the individual's compensation for the year. The contribution limit is reduced to the extent an individual makes contributions to any other IRA for the same taxable year. As under the rules relating to IRAs generally, a contribution of up to $2,000 for each spouse may be made to a Roth IRA provided the combined compensation of the spouses is at least equal to the contributed amount. The maximum annual contribution that can be made to a Roth IRA is phased out for single taxpayers with AGI between $95,000 and $110,000 and for taxpayers filing a joint return with AGI between $150,000 and $160,000. For married taxpayers filing a separate return, the phase-out range is $0 to $10,000.

Taxpayers with modified AGI of $100,000 or less generally may convert a traditional IRA into a Roth IRA. The amount converted is includible in income as if a withdrawal had been made, except that the 10-percent early withdrawal tax does not apply and, if the conversion occurred in 1998, the income inclusion may be spread ratably over 4 years. Married taxpayers who file separate returns cannot convert a traditional IRA into a Roth IRA.

Amounts held in a Roth IRA that are withdrawn as a qualified distribution are neither includible in income, nor subject to the additional 10-percent tax on early withdrawals. A qualified distribution is a distribution that (1) is made after the 5-taxable year period beginning with the first taxable year for which the individual made a contribution to a Roth IRA, and (2) which is made after attainment of age 59½, on account of death or disability, or is made for first-time homebuyer expenses of up to $10,000.

To the extent attributable to earnings, distributions from a Roth IRA that are not qualified distributions are includible in income and subject to the 10-percent early withdrawal tax (unless an exception applies).[2] The same exceptions to the early withdrawal tax that apply to IRAs apply to Roth IRAs.

Taxation of charitable contributions

Generally, a taxpayer who itemizes deductions may deduct cash contributions to charity, as well as the fair market value of contributions of property. The amount of the deduction otherwise allowable for the taxable year with respect to a charitable contribution may be reduced, depending on the type of property contributed, the type of charitable organization to which the property is contributed, and the income of the taxpayer.

For donations of cash by individuals, total deductible contributions to public charities may not exceed 50 percent of a taxpayer's AGI for a taxable year. To the extent a taxpayer has not exceeded the 50-percent limitation, contributions of cash to private foundations and certain other nonprofit organizations and contributions of capital gain property to public charities generally may be deducted up to 30 percent of the taxpayer's AGI. If a taxpayer makes a contribution in one year which exceeds the applicable 50-percent or 30-percent limitation, the excess amount of the contribution may be carried over and deducted during the next five taxable years.

In addition to the percentage limitations imposed specifically on charitable contributions, present law imposes a reduction on most itemized deductions, including charitable contribution deductions, for taxpayers with AGI in excess of a threshold amount, which is indexed annually for inflation. The threshold amount for 2000 is $128,950 ($64,475 for married individuals filing separate returns). For those deductions that are subject to the reduction, the total amount of itemized deductions is reduced by 3 percent of AGI over the threshold amount, but not by more than 80 percent of itemized deductions subject to the reduction. The effect of this reduction may be to limit a taxpayer's ability to deduct charitable contributions.

HOUSE BILL

Increase in annual contribution limits

The House bill increases the maximum annual dollar contribution limit for IRA contributions from $2,000 to $3,000 in 2001, $4,000 in 2002, and $5,000 in 2003. The limit is indexed for inflation in $500 increments in 2004 and thereafter.

Additional catch-up contributions

In the case of individuals who have attained age 50 before the end of the taxable year, the IRA contribution limit is $5,000, beginning in 2001.

Increase in AGI limits for deductible IRA contributions

No provision.

Roth IRAs

No provision.

Deemed IRAs under employer plans

No provision.

Tax-free IRA withdrawals for charitable purposes

No provision.

Effective date

The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000.

SENATE AMENDMENT

Increase in annual contribution limits

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Additional catch-up contributions

The bill provides that individuals who have attained age 50 may make additional catch-up IRA contributions. The otherwise maximum contribution limit (before application of the AGI phase-out limits) for an individual who has attained age 50 before the end of the taxable year is increased by 50 percent.

Increase in AGI limits for deductible IRA contributions

Under the bill, the increases in the AGI phase-out limits for active participants in an employer-sponsored plan are evened out. In addition, the phase-out range for married taxpayers filing separately is conformed to the phase-out range for single taxpayers. The AGI phase-out limits under the bill are as follows.

Taxpayers Filing Returns Other Than Joint Returns

Taxable years beginning in:	AGI Phase-out range
2001	$36,000–46,000
2002	40,000–50,000
2003	44,000–54,000
2004	48,000–58,000
2005 and thereafter	50,000–60,000

Taxpayers Filing Joint Returns

Taxable years beginning in:	AGI Phase-out range
2001	$56,000–66,000
2002	60,000–70,000
2003	64,000–74,000
2004	68,000–78,000
2005	72,000–82,000
2006	76,000–86,000
2007 and thereafter	80,000–100,000

The present-law income phase-out range for an individual who is not an active participant in an employer-sponsored plan, but whose spouse is, remains at $150,000 to $160,000.

Roth IRAs

The bill increases the income phase-out range for Roth IRA contributions to $190,000 to $220,000 for married couples filing a joint return. In addition, the bill applies to married taxpayers filing a separate return the same phase-out range that applies to single taxpayers.

Under the bill, the income limit for conversions of traditional IRAs to Roth IRAs is $200,000 for married couples filing a joint return. For all other taxpayers (including married taxpayers filing a separate return), the limit is $100,000.

Deemed IRAs under employer plans

The bill provides that, if an eligible retirement plan permits employees to make voluntary employee contributions to a separate account or annuity that (1) is established under the plan, and (2) meets the requirements applicable to either traditional IRAs or Roth IRAs, then the separate account or annuity is deemed to be a traditional IRA or a Roth IRA, as applicable, for all purposes of the Code. For example, the reporting requirements applicable to IRAs apply. The deemed IRA, and contributions thereto, are not subject to the Code rules pertaining to the eligible retirement plan. In addition, the deemed IRA, and contributions thereto, are not taken into account in applying such rules to any other contributions under the plan. The deemed IRA, and contributions thereto, are subject to the exclusive benefit and fiduciary rules of ERISA to the extent otherwise applicable to the plan, but are not subject to the ERISA reporting and disclosure, participation, vesting, funding, and enforcement requirements that apply to the eligible retirement plan. An eligible retirement plan is a qualified plan (sec. 401(a)), tax- sheltered annuity (sec. 403(b)), or a governmental section 457 plan.

[2] Early distribution of converted amounts may also accelerate income inclusion of converted amounts that are taxable under the 4-year rule applicable to 1998 conversions.

Tax-free IRA withdrawals for charitable purposes

The bill provides an exclusion from gross income for qualified charitable distributions from an IRA: (1) to an organization to which deductible contributions can be made; (2) to a charitable remainder annuity trust or charitable remainder unitrust; (3) to a pooled income fund (as defined in sec. 642(c)(5)); or (4) for the issuance of a charitable gift annuity. The exclusion applies with respect to distributions described in (2), (3), or (4) only if no person holds an income interest in the trust, fund, or annuity attributable to such distributions other than the IRA owner, his or her spouse, or a charitable organization.

In determining the character of distributions from a charitable remainder annuity trust or a charitable remainder unitrust to which a qualified charitable distribution from an IRA is made, the charitable remainder trust is required to treat as ordinary income the portion of the distribution from the IRA to the trust which would have been includible in income but for the provision, and is required to treat any remaining portion of the distribution as corpus. Similarly, in determining the amount includible in gross income by reason of a payment from a charitable gift annuity purchased with a qualified charitable distribution from an IRA, the taxpayer is not permitted to treat the portion of the distribution from the IRA that would have been taxable but for the provision and which is used to purchase the annuity as an investment in the annuity contract.

A qualified charitable distribution is any distribution from an IRA which (1) is made after age 70½ of the account holder, (2) qualifies as a charitable contribution (within the meaning of sec. 170(c)), and (3) is made directly to the organization or to a charitable remainder annuity trust, charitable remainder unitrust, pooled income fund, or charitable gift annuity (as described above).[3] A taxpayer is not permitted to claim a charitable contribution deduction for amounts transferred from his or her IRA to a charity or to a trust, fund, or annuity that, because of the provision, are excluded from the taxpayer's income. Conversely, if the amounts transferred would otherwise be nontaxable, e.g., a qualified distribution from a Roth IRA, the regularly applicable deduction rules would apply.

Effective date

The provisions are generally effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000. The provision relating to deemed IRAs under employer plans is effective for plan years beginning after December 31, 2001.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

Increase in annual contribution limits

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

Additional catch-up contributions

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with modifications. Under the conference agreement, the maximum catch-up amount is phased in over the same period as the increase in the IRA contribution limit. The maximum catch-up contribution is $500 in 2001, $1,000 in 2002, and $1,500 in 2003. The $1,500 amount is indexed for inflation beginning after 2003 (when the indexing of the $5,000 basic contribution limit begins).

Increase in AGI limits for deductible IRA contributions

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

Roth IRAs

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

Deemed IRAs under employer plans

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment. As under the Senate amendment, if an eligible retirement plan permits employees to make voluntary employee contributions to a separate account or annuity that (1) is established under the plan, and (2) meets the requirements applicable to either traditional IRAs or Roth IRAs, then the separate account or annuity is deemed to be a traditional IRA or a Roth IRA, as applicable, for all purposes of the Code. For example, the IRA reporting requirements apply. The deemed IRA, and contributions thereto, are not subject to the Code rules pertaining to the eligible retirement plan. In addition, the deemed IRA, and contributions thereto, are not taken into account in applying such rules to any other contributions under the plan. The deemed IRA, and contributions thereto, are subject to the exclusive benefit and fiduciary rules of ERISA to the extent otherwise applicable to the plan, but are not subject to the ERISA reporting and disclosure, participation, vesting, funding, and enforcement requirements that apply to the eligible retirement plan. Except as otherwise specified, the provision does not affect the treatment of the deemed IRA as part of the qualified plan.

Tax-free IRA withdrawals for charitable purposes

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with the modification that the tax-free treatment is available only for a distribution made to an organization to which charitable contributions (as defined in sec. 170(c)) can be made, and not for distributions to charitable remainder trusts, pooled income funds, or for the issuance of charitable gift annuities. The conferees clarify that the exclusion does not apply unless the distribution meets the requirements generally applicable to deductible contributions (other than the percentage limits on such deductions). Thus, for example, the substantiation rules and the rule limiting the deductible amount of a contribution to the excess, if any, of the value of the contribution over the value of any benefit received by the donor, would apply. It is intended that the Secretary will issue such rules as are necessary to apply to distributions made to organizations pursuant to the provision.

The conference agreement also clarifies that amounts that would have been includible in gross income but for the provision are not deductible in any year. In addition, such amounts are not taken into account in determining the deductible amount for any year. Except as provided in the provision, a distribution under the provision is treated the same as other IRA distributions. Thus, for example, the distribution is taken into account in determining whether the minimum distribution requirements are satisfied.

Effective date

The provisions are generally effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000. The provision relating to deemed IRAs under employer plans is effective for plan years beginning after December 31, 2001.

Subtitle B: Expanding Coverage (secs. 411–418 of the bill)

A. INCREASE IN BENEFIT AND CONTRIBUTION LIMITS (SEC. 201 OF THE HOUSE BILL, SEC. 201 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT, AND SECS. 401(A)(17), 402(G), 408(P), 415, AND 457 OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

In general

Under present law, limits apply to contributions and benefits under qualified plans (sec. 415), the amount of compensation that may be taken into account under a plan for determining benefits (sec. 401(a)(17)), the maximum amount of elective deferrals that an individual may make to a salary reduction plan or tax sheltered annuity (sec. 402(g)), and deferrals under an eligible deferred compensation plan of a tax-exempt organization or a State or local government (sec. 457).

Limitations on contributions and benefits

Under present law, the limits on contributions and benefits under qualified plans are based on the type of plan. Under a defined contribution plan, the qualification rules limit the annual additions to the plan with respect to each plan participant to the lesser of (1) 25 percent of compensation or (2) $30,000 (for 2000). Annual additions are the sum of employer contributions, employee contributions, and forfeitures with respect to an individual under all defined contribution plans of the same employer. The $30,000 limit is indexed for inflation in $5,000 increments.

Under a defined benefit plan, the maximum annual benefit payable at retirement is generally the lesser of (1) 100 percent of average compensation, or (2) $135,000 (for 2000). The dollar limit is adjusted for inflation in $5,000 increments.

Under present law, in general, the dollar limit on annual benefits is reduced if benefits under the plan begin before the social security retirement age (currently, age 65) and increased if benefits begin after social security retirement age.

Compensation limitation

Under present law, the annual compensation of each participant that may be taken into account for purposes of determining contributions and benefits under a plan, applying the deduction rules, and for nondiscrimination testing purposes is limited to $170,000 (for 2000). The compensation limit is indexed for inflation in $10,000 increments.

Elective deferral limitations

Under present law, under certain salary reduction arrangements, an employee may elect to have the employer make payments as contributions to a plan on behalf of the employee, or to the employee directly in cash. Contributions made at the election of the employee are called elective deferrals.

The maximum annual amount of elective deferrals that an individual may make to a qualified cash or deferred arrangement (a "section 401(k) plan"), a tax-sheltered annuity ("section 403(b) annuity") or a salary reduction simplified employee pension plan

[3] It is intended that, in the case of transfer to a trust, fund, or annuity, the full amount distributed from an IRA will meet the definition of a qualified charitable distribution if the charitable organization's interest in the distribution would qualify as a charitable contribution under section 170.

("SEP") is $10,500 (for 2000). The maximum annual amount of elective deferrals that an individual may make to a SIMPLE plan is $6,000. These limits are indexed for inflation in $500 increments.

Section 457 plans

The maximum annual deferral under a deferred compensation plan of a State or local government or a tax-exempt organization (a "section 457 plan") is the lesser of (1) $8,000 (for 2000) or (2) 33½ percent of compensation. The $8,000 dollar limit is indexed for inflation in $500 increments. Under a special catch-up rule, the section 457 plan may provide that, for one or more of the participant's last 3 years before retirement, the otherwise applicable limit is increased to the lesser of (1) $15,000 or (2) the sum of the otherwise applicable limit for the year plus the amount by which the limit applicable in preceding years of participation exceeded the deferrals for that year.

HOUSE BILL

Limits on contributions and benefits

The House bill increases the $30,000 annual addition limit for defined contribution plans to $40,000. This amount is indexed for inflation in $1,000 increments.[4]

The House bill increases the $135,000 annual benefit limit under a defined benefit plan to $160,000. The dollar limit is reduced for benefit commencement before age 62 and increased for benefit commencement after age 65.

Compensation limitation

The House bill increases the limit on compensation that may be taken into account under a plan to $200,000. This amount is indexed for inflation in $5,000 increments.

Elective deferral limitations

The House bill increases the dollar limit on annual elective deferrals under section 401(k) plans, section 403(b) annuities and salary reduction SEPs to $11,000 in 2001, and in $1,000 annual increments thereafter until the limits reach $15,000 in 2005. The $15,000 limit is indexed for inflation in $500 increments beginning in 2006. Beginning in 2001, the House bill increases the maximum annual elective deferrals that may be made to a SIMPLE plan in $1,000 annual increments until the limit reaches $10,000 in 2004. The $10,000 limit is indexed for inflation in $500 increments beginning in 2005.

Section 457 plans

The House bill increases the dollar limit on deferrals under a section 457 plan to conform to the elective deferral limitation. Thus, the limit is $11,000 in 2001, and is increased in $1,000 annual increments thereafter until the limit reaches $15,000 in 2005. The $15,000 limit is indexed for inflation in $500 increments beginning in 2006. The limit is twice the otherwise applicable dollar limit in the three years prior to retirement.[5]

Effective date

The House bill is effective for years beginning after December 31, 2000.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill, except with respect to the provision relating to the defined contribution plan dollar limit. The Senate amendment retains the present-law $30,000 limit, and indexes the limit for inflation in $1,000 increments.

Effective date.—Same as the House bill.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House bill. In adopting rules regarding the application of the increase in the defined benefit plan limits under the bill, the conferees intend that the Secretary will apply rules similar to those adopted in Notice 99-44 regarding benefit increases due to the repeal of the combined plan limit under former section 415(e). Thus, for example, a defined benefit plan could provide for benefit increases to reflect the provisions of the bill for a current or former employee who has commenced benefits under the plan prior to the effective date of the bill if the employee or former employee has an accrued benefit under the plan (other than an accrued benefit resulting from a benefit increase solely as a result of the increases in the section 415 limits under the bill). As under the notice, the maximum amount of permitted increase is generally the amount that could have been provided had the provisions of the bill been in effect at the time of the commencement of benefit. In no case can benefits reflect increases that could not be paid prior to the effective date because of the limits in effect under present law. In addition, in no case can plan amendments providing increased benefits under the relevant provision of the bill be effective prior to the effective date of the provision.

B. PLAN LOANS FOR S CORPORATION SHAREHOLDERS, PARTNERS, AND SOLE PROPRIETORS (SEC. 202 OF THE HOUSE BILL, SEC. 202 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT, AND SEC. 4975 OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

The Internal Revenue Code prohibits certain transactions ("prohibited transactions") between a qualified plan and a disqualified person in order to prevent persons with a close relationship to the qualified plan from using that relationship to the detriment of plan participants and beneficiaries.[6] Certain types of transactions are exempted from the prohibited transaction rules, including loans from the plan to plan participants, if certain requirements are satisfied. In addition, the Secretary of Labor can grant an administrative exemption from the prohibited transaction rules if she finds the exemption is administratively feasible, in the interest of the plan and plan participants and beneficiaries, and protective of the rights of participants and beneficiaries of the plan. Pursuant to this exemption process, the Secretary of Labor grants exemptions both with respect to specific transactions and classes of transactions.

The statutory exemptions to the prohibited transaction rules do not apply to certain transactions in which the plan makes a loan to an owner-employee.[7] Loans to participants other than owner-employees are permitted if loans are available to all participants on a reasonably equivalent basis, are not made available to highly compensated employees, are made in accordance with specific provisions in the plan, bear a reasonable rate of interest, and are adequately secured. In addition, the Code places limits on the amount of loans and the repayment terms.

For purposes of the prohibited transaction rules, an owner-employee means (1) a sole proprietor, (2) a partner who owns more than 10 percent of either the capital interest or the profits interest in the partnership, (3) an employee or officer of an S corporation who owns more than 5 percent of the outstanding stock of the corporation, and (4) the owner of an individual retirement arrangement ("IRA"). The term owner-employee also includes certain family members of an owner-employee and certain corporations owned by an owner-employee.

Under the Internal Revenue Code, a two-tier excise tax is imposed on disqualified persons who engage in a prohibited transaction. The first level tax is equal to 15 percent of the amount involved in the transaction. The second level tax is imposed if the prohibited transaction is not corrected within a certain period, and is equal to 100 percent of the amount involved.

HOUSE BILL

The House bill generally eliminates the special present-law rules relating to plan loans made to an owner-employee (other than the owner of an IRA). Thus, the general statutory exemption applies to such transactions. Present law continues to apply with respect to IRAs.

Effective date.—The House bill is effective with respect to loans made after December 31, 2000.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.[8]

Effective date.—The Senate amendment is effective for years beginning after December 31, 2000.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

Effective date.—The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment. Thus, as under the Senate amendment, a loan that is a prohibited transaction solely because of the present-law restriction would cease to be a prohibited transaction on January 1, 2000. However, the loan would continue to be a prohibited transaction prior to January 1, 2000.

C. MODIFICATION OF TOP-HEAVY RULES (SEC. 203 OF THE HOUSE BILL, SEC. 203 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT, AND SEC. 416 OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

In general

Under present law, additional qualification requirements apply to plans that primarily benefit an employer's key employees ("top-heavy plans"). These additional requirements provide (1) more rapid vesting for plan participants who are non-key employees and (2) minimum nonintegrated employer contributions or benefits for plan participants who are non-key employees.

Definition of top-heavy plan

In general, a top-heavy plan is a plan under which more than 60 percent of the contributions or benefits are provided to key employees.

For purposes of determining whether a plan is a top-heavy plan, benefits derived both from employer and employee contributions, including employee elective contributions, are taken into account. In addition, the accrued benefit of a participant in a defined benefit plan and the account balance of a participant in a defined contribution plan includes any amount distributed within the 5-year period ending on the determination date.

[4] The 25 percent of compensation limitation is increased to 100 percent of compensation under another provision of the House bill.

[5] Another provision of the House bill increases the 33⅓ percentage of compensation limit to 100 percent.

[6] Title I of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, as amended ("ERISA"), also contains prohibited transaction rules. The Code and ERISA provisions are substantially similar, although not identical.

[7] Certain transactions involving a plan and S corporation shareholders are permitted.

[8] The Senate amendment also amends the corresponding provisions of ERISA.

An individual's accrued benefit or account balance is not taken into account in determining whether a plan is top-heavy if the individual has not performed services for the employer during the 5-year period ending on the determination date.

SIMPLE plans are not subject to the top-heavy rules.

Definition of key employee

A key employee is an employee who, during the plan year containing the determination date for the plan year in question or any of the 4 preceding plan years, is (1) an officer earning over one-half of the defined benefit plan dollar limitation of section 415 ($67,500 for 2000), (2) a 5-percent owner of the employer, (3) a 1-percent owner of the employer earning over $150,000, or (4) one of the 10 employees earning more than the defined contribution plan dollar limit ($30,000 for 2000) with the largest ownership interests in the employer. A family ownership attribution rule applies to the determination of 1-percent owner status, 5-percent owner status, and largest ownership interest. Under this attribution rule, an individual is treated as owning stock owned by the individual's spouse, children, grandchildren, or parents.

Minimum benefit for non-key employees

A minimum benefit generally must be provided to all non-key employees in a top-heavy plan. In general, a top-heavy defined benefit plan must provide a minimum benefit equal to the lesser of (1) 2 percent of compensation multiplied by the employee's years of service, or (2) 20 percent of compensation. A top-heavy defined contribution plan must provide a minimum annual contribution equal to the lesser of (1) 3 percent of compensation, or (2) the percentage of compensation at which contributions were made for key employees (including employee elective contributions made by key employees and employer matching contributions).

For purposes of the minimum benefit rules, only benefits derived from employer contributions (other than amounts employees have elected to defer) to the plan are taken into account, and an employee's social security benefits are disregarded (i.e., the minimum benefit is nonintegrated). Employer matching contributions may be used to satisfy the minimum contribution requirement; however, in such a case the contributions are not treated as matching contributions for purposes of applying the special nondiscrimination requirements applicable to employee elective contributions and matching contributions under sections 401(k) and (m). Thus, such contributions would have to meet the general nondiscrimination test of section 401(a)(4).[9]

Top-heavy vesting

Benefits under a top-heavy plan must vest at least as rapidly as under one of the following schedules: (1) 3-year cliff vesting, which provides for 100 percent vesting after 3 years of service; and (2) 2-6 year graded vesting, which provides for 20 percent vesting after 2 years of service, and 20 percent more each year thereafter so that a participant is fully vested after 6 years of service.[10]

Qualified cash or deferred arrangements

Under a qualified cash or deferred arrangement (a "section 401(k) plan"), an employee may elect to have the employer make payments as contributions to a qualified plan on behalf of the employee, or to the employee directly in cash. Contributions made at the election of the employee are called elective deferrals. A special nondiscrimination test applies to elective deferrals under cash or deferred arrangements, which compares the elective deferrals of highly compensated employees with elective deferrals of nonhighly compensated employees. (This test is called the actual deferral percentage test or the "ADP" test). Employer matching contributions under qualified defined contribution plans are also subject to a similar nondiscrimination test. (This test is called the actual contribution percentage test or the "ACP" test.)

Under a design-based safe harbor, a cash or deferred arrangement is deemed to satisfy the ADP test if the plan satisfies one of two contribution requirements and satisfies a notice requirement.

HOUSE BILL

Definition of top-heavy plan

The provision provides that a plan consisting of a cash-or-deferred arrangement that satisfies the design-based safe harbor for such plans and matching contributions that satisfy the safe harbor rule for such contributions is not a top-heavy plan. Matching or nonelective contributions provided under such a plan may be taken into account in satisfying the minimum contribution requirements applicable to top-heavy plans.[11]

In determining whether a plan is top-heavy, the provision provides that distributions during the year ending on the date the top-heavy determination is being made are taken into account; however, the present-law 5-year rule applies with respect to in-service distributions. Similarly, the provision provides that an individual's accrued benefit or account balance is not taken into account if the individual has not performed services for the employer during the 1-year period ending on the date the top-heavy determination is being made.

Definition of key employee

The provision (1) provides that an employee is not considered a key employee by reason of officer status unless the employee earns more than $150,000 in compensation for the year, and (2) repeals the top-10 owner key employee category.

The provision repeals the 4-year lookback rule for determining key employee status and provides that an employee is a key employee only if he or she is a key employee during the plan year containing the determination date for the plan year in question.

The family ownership attribution rule no longer applies in determining whether an individual is a 5-percent owner of the employer for purposes of the top-heavy rules only. The family ownership attribution rule continues to apply to other provisions that cross reference the top-heavy rules, such as the definition of highly compensated employee and the definition of 1-percent owner under the top-heavy rules.

Minimum benefit for non-key employees

Under the provision, matching contributions are taken into account in determining whether the minimum benefit requirement has been satisfied.[12]

The provision provides that, in determining the minimum benefit required under a defined benefit plan, a year of service does not include any year in which no employee benefits under the plan (as determined under sec. 410).

Effective date

The provision is effective for years beginning after December 31, 2000.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment follows the House bill, with the following modifications.

Under the Senate amendment, an employee is considered a key employee if, during the prior year, the employee was (1) an officer with compensation in excess of $85,000 (for 2000), (2) a 5-percent owner, or (3) a 1-percent owner with compensation in excess of $150,000. The present-law limits on the number of officers treated as key employees under (1) continue to apply. An employee who was not an employee in the preceding plan year, or who was an employee only for part of the year, is treated as a key employee if it can be reasonably anticipated that the employee will meet the definition of a key employee for current plan year.

The Senate amendment provides that, in determining the minimum benefit required under a defined benefit plan, a year of service does not include any year in which no key employee or former key employee benefits under the plan (as determined under sec. 410).

Effective date.—The Senate amendment is effective for years beginning after December 31, 2000.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House bill, with the following modifications. Under the conference agreement, an employee is a key employee if, during the plan year containing the determination date for the plan year in question, the employee was (1) an officer with compensation in excess of $115,000 (indexed for inflation after 2001), (2) a 5-percent owner, or (3) a 1-percent owner with compensation in excess of $150,000. The present-law limits on the number of officers treated as key employees under (1) continue to apply. As under the House bill, the family ownership attribution rule no longer applies in determining whether an individual is a 5-percent owner of the employer for purposes of the top-heavy rules only. The family ownership attribution rule continues to apply to other provisions that cross reference the top-heavy rules, such as the definition of highly compensated employee and the definition of 1-percent owner under the top-heavy rules.

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment in providing that, in determining the minimum benefit required under a defined benefit plan, a year of service does not include any year in which no key employee or former key employee benefits under the plan (as determined under sec. 410).

Effective date.—The conference agreement is effective for years beginning after December 31, 2000.

D. ELECTIVE DEFERRALS NOT TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT FOR PURPOSES OF DEDUCTION LIMITS (SEC. 204 OF THE HOUSE BILL, SEC. 204 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT, AND SEC. 404 OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

Employer contributions to one or more qualified retirement plans are deductible subject to certain limits. In general, the deduction limit depends on the kind of plan.

[9] Tres. Reg. sec. 1.416-1 Q&A M-19.

[10] Benefits under a plan that is not top heavy must vest at least as rapidly as under one of the following schedules: (1) 5-year cliff vesting; and (2) 3-7 year graded vesting, which provides for 20 percent vesting after 3 years of service and 20 percent more each year thereafter so that a participant is fully vested after 7 years of service.

[11] This provision is not intended to preclude the use of nonelective contributions that are used to satisfy the safe harbor rules from being used to satisfy other qualified retirement plan nondiscrimination rules, including those involving cross-testing.

[12] Thus, this provision overrides the provision in Treasury regulations that, if matching contributions are used to satisfy the minimum benefit requirement, then they are not treated as matching contributions for purposes of the section 401(m) nondiscrimination rules.

In the case of a defined benefit pension plan or a money purchase pension plan, the employer generally may deduct the amount necessary to satisfy the minimum funding cost of the plan for the year. If a defined benefit pension plan has more than 100 participants, the maximum amount deductible is at least equal to the plan's unfunded current liabilities.

In the case of a profit-sharing or stock bonus plan, the employer generally may deduct an amount equal to 15 percent of compensation of the employees covered by the plan for the year.

If an employer sponsors both a defined benefit pension plan and a defined contribution plan that covers some of the same employees (or a money purchase pension plan and another kind of defined contribution plan), the total deduction for all plans for a plan year generally is limited to the greater of (1) 25 percent of compensation or (2) the contribution necessary to meet the minimum funding requirements of the defined benefit pension plan for the year (or the amount of the plan's unfunded current liabilities, in the case of a plan with more than 100 participants).

For purposes of the deduction limits, employee elective deferral contributions to a section 401(k) plan are treated as employer contributions and, thus, are subject to the generally applicable deduction limits.

Subject to certain exceptions, nondeductible contributions are subject to a 10-percent excise tax.

HOUSE BILL

Under the House bill, elective deferral contributions are not subject to the deduction limits, and the application of a deduction limitation to any other employer contribution to a qualified retirement plan does not take into account elective deferral contributions.

Effective date.—The House bill is effective for years beginning after December 31, 2000.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

E. Repeal of Coordination Requirements for Deferred Compensation Plans of State and Local Governments and Tax-Exempt Organizations (sec. 205 of the House bill, sec. 205 of the Senate amendment, and sec. 457 of the Code)

PRESENT LAW

Compensation deferred under an eligible deferred compensation plan of a tax-exempt or State and local government employer (a "section 457 plan") is not includible in gross income until paid or made available. In general, the maximum permitted annual deferral under such a plan is the lesser of (1) $8,000 (in 2000) or (2) 33⅓ percent of compensation. The $8,000 limit is indexed for inflation in $500 increments.

The $8,000 limit (as modified under the catch-up rule), applies to all deferrals under all section 457 plans in which the individual participates. In addition, in applying the $8,000 limit, contributions under a tax-sheltered annuity ("section 403(b) annuity"), elective deferrals under a qualified cash or deferred arrangement ("section 401(k) plan"), salary reduction contributions under a simplified employee pension plan ("SEP"), and contributions under a SIMPLE plan are taken into account. Further, the amount deferred under a section 457 plan is taken into account in applying a special catch-up rule for section 403(b) annuities.

HOUSE BILL

The House bill repeals the rules coordinating the section 457 dollar limit with contributions under other types of plans.[13]

Effective date.—The House bill is effective for years beginning after December 31, 2000.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

F. Eliminate IRS User Fees for Certain Requests Regarding Employer Plans (sec. 206 of the House bill)

PRESENT LAW

An employer that maintains a retirement plan for the benefit of its employees may request from the Internal Revenue Service ("IRS") a determination as to whether the form of the plan satisfies the requirements applicable to tax-qualified plans (sec. 401(a)). In order to obtain a determination letter on the qualified status of the plan, the employer must pay a user fee. The Secretary determines the user fee to be made for various types of requests, subject to statutory minimum requirements for average fees based on the category of the request. The user fee for a employee plan determination letter request may range from $125 to $1,250, depending upon the scope of the request and the type and format of the plan.[14]

In general, a qualified plan which does not meet the qualification requirements as a result of a disqualifying provision may be amended retroactively to comply with such requirements if the necessary amendments are adopted within the remedial amendment period. The remedial amendment period with respect to plan amendments needed to reflect changes in the law generally ends by the due date for the employer's tax return for the taxable year in which the change in the law occurs. The Secretary is authorized to extend the otherwise applicable remedial amendment period. Pursuant to this authority, the Secretary has provided extended remedial amendment periods with respect to recent legislation affecting qualified plans.[15]

HOUSE BILL

Under the House bill, a small employer (100 or fewer employees) is not required to pay a user fee for any determination letter request with respect to the qualified status of a retirement plan that the employer maintains, if the request is made within the first 5 plan years of the plan. The House bill applies only to requests by employers for determination letters concerning the qualified retirement plans they maintain. Therefore, a sponsor of a prototype plan is required to pay a user fee for a request for a notification letter, opinion letter, or similar ruling. A small employer that adopts a prototype plan, however, is not required to pay a user fee for a determination letter request with respect to the employer's plan.

Effective date.—The House bill is effective for determination letter requests made after December 31, 2000.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House bill, with the following modification. Under the conference agreement, a small employer also is not required to pay a user fee for a determination letter request made prior to the end of a remedial amendment period beginning within the first 5 plan years of the plan. In addition, determination letter requests for which user fees are not required under the conference agreement are not taken into account in determining average user fees.

F. Deduction Limits (sec. 207 of the House bill, sec. 206 of the Senate amendment, and sec. 404 of the Code)

PRESENT LAW

Employer contributions to one or more qualified retirement plans are deductible subject to certain limits. In general, the deduction limit depends on the kind of plan. Subject to certain exceptions, nondeductible contributions are subject to a 10-percent excise tax.

In the case of a defined benefit pension plan or a money purchase pension plan, the employer generally may deduct the amount necessary to satisfy the minimum funding cost of the plan for the year. If a defined benefit pension plan has more than 100 participants, the maximum amount deductible is at least equal to the plan's unfunded current liabilities.

In some cases, the amount of deductible contributions is limited by compensation. In the case of a profit-sharing or stock bonus plan, the employer generally may deduct an amount equal to 15 percent of compensation of the employees covered by the plan for the year.

If an employer sponsors both a defined benefit pension plan and a defined contribution plan that covers some of the same employees (or a money purchase pension plan and another kind of defined contribution plan), the total deduction for all plans for a plan year generally is limited to the greater of (1) 25 percent of compensation or (2) the contribution necessary to meet the minimum funding requirements of the defined benefit pension plan for the year (or the amount of the plan's unfunded current liabilities, in the case of a plan with more than 100 participants).

In the case of an employee stock ownership plan ("ESOP"), principal payments on a loan used to acquire qualifying employer securities are deductible up to 25 percent of compensation.

For purposes of the deduction limits, employee elective deferral contributions to a qualified cash or deferred arrangement ("section 401(k) plan") are treated as employer contributions and, thus, are subject to the generally applicable deduction limits.[16]

For purposes of the deduction rules, compensation generally includes only taxable compensation, and thus does not include salary reduction amounts, such as elective deferrals under a section 401(k) plan or a tax-sheltered annuity ("section 403(b) annuity"), elective contributions under a deferred compensation plan of a tax-exempt organization or a State or local government ("section 457 plan"), and salary reduction contributions under a section 125 cafeteria plan. For purposes of the contribution limits under section 415, compensation does include such salary reduction amounts.

[13] The limits on deferrals under a section 457 plan are modified under other provisions of the House bill.

[14] Authorization for the user fees was originally enacted in section 10511 of the Revenue Act of 1987 (Pub. L. No. 100-203, December 22, 1987). The authorization was extended through September 30, 2003, by Public Law Number 104-117 (An Act to provide that members of the Armed Forces preforming services for the peacekeeping efforts in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, and Macedonia shall be entitled to tax benefits in the same manner as if such services were performed in a combat zone, and for other purposes (March 20, 1996)).

[15] See, e.g., Rev. Proc. 99-23, 1999-16 IRB 6.

[16] Another provision in the House bill provides that elective deferrals are not subject to the deduction limits.

HOUSE BILL

Under the House bill, the definition of compensation for purposes of the deduction rules includes salary reduction amounts treated as compensation under section 415. In addition, the annual limitation on the amount of deductible contributions to a profit-sharing or stock bonus plan is increased from 15 percent to 20 percent of compensation of the employees covered by the plan for the year.

Effective date.—The House bill is effective for years beginning after December 31, 2000.

SENATE AMENDMENT

Under the Senate amendment, the definition of compensation for purposes of the deduction rules includes salary reduction amounts treated as compensation under section 415. In addition, the annual limitation on the amount of deductible contributions to a profit-sharing or stock bonus plan is increased from 15 percent to 25 percent of compensation of the employees covered by the plan for the year. Also, the Senate amendment provides that, except to the extent provided in regulations, a money purchase pension plan is treated like a profit-sharing or stock bonus plan for purposes of the deduction rules.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment. The conferees intend that the Treasury regulations authorized by the conference agreement will address the need for an appropriate increase of the annual limitation on the amount of deductible contributions to a money purchase pension plan by an amount that equals the minimum funding requirement attributable to the prior plan year, but only to the extent that such amount was not deductible for the prior taxable year because the amount was not contributed prior to the due date of the employer's federal income tax return for the prior taxable year (even though the amount was contributed within 8½ months after the end of the prior plan year and therefore satisfied the minimum funding requirement).

H. OPTION TO TREAT ELECTIVE DEFERRALS AS AFTER-TAX CONTRIBUTIONS (SEC. 208 OF THE HOUSE BILL, SEC. 207 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT, AND NEW SEC. 402A OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

A qualified cash or deferred arrangement ("section 401(k) plan") or a tax-sheltered annuity ("section 403(b) annuity") may permit a participant to elect to have the employer make payments as contributions to the plan or to the participant directly in cash. Contributions made to the plan at the election of a participant are elective deferrals. Elective deferrals must be nonforfeitable and are subject to an annual dollar limitation (sec. 402(g))[17] and distribution restrictions. In addition, elective deferrals under a section 401(k) plan are subject to special nondiscrimination rules. Elective deferrals that do not exceed the annual dollar limitation (and earnings attributable thereto) are not includible in a participant's gross income until distributed from the plan.

Elective deferrals for a taxable year that exceed the annual dollar limitation ("excess deferrals") are includible in gross income for the taxable year. If an employee makes elective deferrals under a plan (or plans) of a single employer that exceed the annual dollar limitation ("excess deferrals"), then the plan may provide for the distribution of the excess deferrals, with earnings thereon. If the excess deferrals are made to more than one plan of unrelated employers, then the plan may permit the individual to allocate excess deferrals among the various plans, no later than the March 1 (April 15 under the applicable regulations) following the end of the taxable year. If excess deferrals are distributed not later than April 15 following the end of the taxable year, along with earnings attributable to the excess deferrals, then the excess deferrals are not again includible in income when distributed. The earnings are includible in income in the year distributed. If excess deferrals (and income thereon) are not distributed by the applicable April 15, then the excess deferrals (and income thereon) are includible in income when received by the participant. Thus, excess deferrals that are not distributed by the applicable April 15th are taxable both in the taxable year when the deferral was made and in the year the participant receives a distribution of the excess deferral.

Individuals with adjusted gross income below certain levels generally may make nondeductible contributions to a Roth IRA and may convert a deductible or nondeductible IRA into a Roth IRA. Amounts held in a Roth IRA that are withdrawn as a qualified distribution are not includible in income, nor subject to the additional 10-percent tax on early withdrawals. A qualified distribution is a distribution that (1) is made after the 5-taxable year period beginning with the first taxable year for which the individual made a contribution to a Roth IRA, and (2) is made after attainment of age 59½, is made on account of death or disability, or is a qualified special purpose distribution (i.e., for first-time homebuyer expenses of up to $10,000). A distribution from a Roth IRA that is not a qualified distribution is includible in income to the extent attributable to earnings, and is subject to the 10-percent tax on early withdrawals (unless an exception applies).[18]

HOUSE BILL

A section 401(k) plan or a section 403(b) annuity is permitted to include a "qualified plus contribution program" that permits a participant to elect to have all or a portion of the participant's elective deferrals under the plan treated as designated plus contributions. Designated plus contributions are elective deferrals that the participant designates as not excludable from the participant's gross income.

The annual dollar limitation on a participant's designated plus contributions is the section 402(g) annual limitation on elective deferrals, reduced by the participant's elective deferrals that the participant does not designate as designated plus contributions. Designated plus contributions are treated as any other elective deferral for purposes of nonforfeitability requirements and distribution restrictions. Under a section 401(k) plan, designated plus contributions also are treated as any other elective deferral for purposes of the special nondiscrimination requirements.

The plan is required to establish a separate account, and maintain separate recordkeeping, for a participant's designated plus contributions (and earnings allocable thereto). A qualified distribution from a participant's designated plus contributions account is not includible in the participant's gross income. A qualified distribution is a distribution that is made after the end of a specified nonexclusion period and that is (1) made on or after the date on which the participant attains age 59½, (2) made to a beneficiary (or to the estate of the participant) on or after the death of the participant, or (3) attributable to the participant's being disabled.[19] The nonexclusion period is the 5-year-taxable period beginning with the earlier of (1) the first taxable year for which the participant made a designated plus contribution to any designated plus contribution account established for the participant under the plan, or (2) if the participant has made a rollover contribution to the designated plus contribution account that is the source of the distribution from a designated plus contribution account established for the participant under another plan, the first taxable year for which the participant made a designated plus contribution to the previously established account.

A distribution from a designated plus contributions account that is a corrective distribution of an elective deferral (and income allocable thereto) that exceeds the section 402(g) annual limit on elective deferrals is not a qualified distribution.

A participant is permitted to roll over a distribution from a designated plus contributions account only to another designated plus contributions account or a Roth IRA of the participant.

The Secretary of the Treasury is directed to require the plan administrator of each section 401(k) plan or section 403(b) annuity that permits participants to make designated plus contributions to make such returns and reports regarding designated plus contributions to the Secretary, plan participants and beneficiaries, and other persons that the Secretary may designate.

Effective date.—The House bill is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill, except that the Senate amendment refers to designated plus contributions as "Roth contributions."

The Senate amendment also includes additional clarifications in the legislative history. The Senate amendment provides that it is intended that the Secretary generally will not permit retroactive designations of elective deferrals as Roth contributions. The Senate amendment also clarifies that Roth contributions to a section 403(b) annuity are treated the same as other salary reduction contributions to the annuity (except that Roth contributions are includible in gross income). The Senate amendment provides that it is intended that the Secretary will provide ordering rules regarding the return of excess contributions under the special nondiscrimination rules (pursuant to sec. 401(k)(8)) in the event a participant has made both Roth contributions and regular elective contributions. It is intended that such rules will generally permit a plan to allow participants to designate which contributions are returned first or to permit the plan to specify which contributions are returned first.

[17] The limit on elective deferrals is $10,500 for 2000. This limit is increased under another provision of the bill.

[18] Early distributions of converted amounts may also accelerate income inclusion of converted amounts that are taxable under the 4-year rule applicable to 1998 conversions.

[19] A qualified special purpose distribution, as defined under the rules relating to Roth IRAs, does not qualify as a tax-free distribution from a designated plus contributions account.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment. The conference agreement clarifies the treatment of excess deferrals to the extent attributable to excess Roth contributions. In general, the conference agreement conforms the treatment of excess Roth contributions to the treatment of excess deferrals attributable to non-Roth elective deferrals. If excess Roth contributions (including earnings thereon) are distributed no later than the April 15th following the taxable year, then the Roth contributions are not includible in gross income as a result of the distribution, because such contributions are includible in gross income when made. Earnings on such excess contributions are treated the same as earnings on excess deferrals distributed no later than April 15th, i.e., they are includible in income when distributed. If excess Roth contributions are not distributed no later than the applicable April 15th, then such contributions (and earnings thereon) are taxable when distributed. Thus, as is the case with excess elective deferrals that are not distributed by the applicable April 15th, the contributions are includible in income in the year when made and again when distributed from the plan. Earnings on such contributions are taxable when received.

It is intended that the Secretary will provide ordering rules regarding the return of excess deferrals in the event a participant has made both Roth contributions and regular contributions to the plan. It is intended that such rules will generally permit a plan to allow participants to designate which contributions are returned first or to permit the plan to specify which contributions are returned first. It is also intended that the Secretary will provide ordering rules to determine the extent to which a distribution consists of excess Roth contributions.

Subtitle C. Enhancing Fairness for Women (secs. 421–427 of the bill)

A. ADDITIONAL SALARY REDUCTION CATCH-UP CONTRIBUTIONS (SEC. 301 OF THE HOUSE BILL, SEC. 301 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT, AND SEC. 414 OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

Elective deferral limitations

Under present law, under certain salary reduction arrangements, an employee may elect to have the employer make payments as contributions to a plan on behalf of the employee, or to the employee directly in cash. Contributions made at the election of the employee are called elective deferrals.

The maximum annual amount of elective deferrals that an individual may make to a qualified cash or deferred arrangement (a "401(k) plan"), a tax-sheltered annuity ("section 403(b) annuity") or a salary reduction simplified employee pension plan ("SEP") is $10,500 (for 2000). The maximum annual amount of elective deferrals that an individual may make to a SIMPLE plan is $6,000. These limits are indexed for inflation in $500 increments.

Section 457 plans

The maximum annual deferral under a deferred compensation plan of a State or local government or a tax-exempt organization (a "section 457 plan") is the lesser of (1) $8,000 (for 2000) or (2) 33⅓ percent of compensation. The $8,000 dollar limit is indexed for inflation in $500 increments. Under a special catch-up rule, the section 457 plan may provide that, for one or more of the participant's last 3 years before retirement, the otherwise applicable limit is increased to the lesser of (1) $15,000 or (2) the sum of the otherwise applicable limit for the year plus the amount by which the limit applicable in preceding years of participation exceeded the deferrals for that year.

HOUSE BILL

The provision provides that the otherwise applicable dollar limit on elective deferrals under a section 401(k) plan, section 403(b) annuity, or SIMPLE, or deferrals under a section 457 plan are increased for individuals who have attained age 50 by the end of the year.[20] Additional contributions are permitted to be made by an individual who has attained age 50 before the end of the plan year and with respect to whom no other elective deferrals may otherwise be made to the plan for the year because of the application of any limitation of the Code (e.g., the annual limit on elective deferrals) or of the plan. Under the provision, the additional amount of elective contributions that are permitted to be made by an eligible individual participating in such a plan is the lesser of (1) $5,000, or (2) the participant's compensation for the year reduced by any other elective deferrals of the participant for the year.[21] This $5,000 amount is indexed for inflation in $500 increments in 2006 and thereafter.

Catch-up contributions made under the provision are not subject to any other contribution limits and are not taken into account in applying other contribution limits. Such contributions are subject to applicable nondiscrimination rules.[22]

An employer is permitted to make matching contributions with respect to catch-up contributions. Any such matching contributions are subject to the normally applicable rules.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The bill provides that individuals who have attained age 50 may be permitted to make additional catch-up elective contributions to employer-sponsored retirement plans.[23]

In the case of employer-sponsored retirement plans, the provision applies to elective deferrals under a section 401(k) plan, section 403(b) annuity, SIMPLE, or a section 457 plan. Additional contributions may be made by an individual who has attained age 50 before the end of the plan year and with respect to whom no other elective deferrals may otherwise be made to the plan for the year because of the application of any limitation of the Code (e.g., the annual limit on elective deferrals) or of the plan.[24] Under the bill, the additional amount of elective contributions that could be made by an eligible individual participating in such a plan is the lesser of (1) the applicable percent of the maximum dollar amount of elective deferrals otherwise excludable from the gross income of the participant for the year (under sec. 402(g)) or (2) the participant's compensation for the year reduced by any other elective deferrals of the participant for the year.[25] The applicable percent is 10 percent in 2001, and increases by 10 percentage points until the applicable percent is 50 in 2005 and thereafter.

Catch-up contributions made under the bill are not subject to any other contribution limits and are not taken into account in applying other contribution limits. In addition, such contributions are not subject to otherwise applicable nondiscrimination rules or the top-heavy rules.

An employer is permitted to make matching contributions with respect to catch-up contributions. Any such matching contributions are subject to the normally applicable rules.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for contributions in taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House bill, with a modification. Although catch- up contributions are subject to applicable nondiscrimination rules, a plan will not be treated as failing to meet the applicable nondiscrimination requirements under section 401(a)(4) with respect to benefits, rights, and features if the plan allows all eligible individuals participating in the plan to make the same election with respect to catch-up contributions. For purposes of this rule, all plans of related employers are treated as a single plan.

B. EQUITABLE TREATMENT FOR CONTRIBUTIONS OF EMPLOYEES TO DEFINED CONTRIBUTION PLANS (SEC. 302 OF THE HOUSE BILL, SEC. 302 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT AND SECS. 413(B), 415, AND 452 OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

Present law imposes limits on the contributions that may be made to tax-favored retirement plans.

Defined contribution plans

In the case of a tax-qualified defined contribution plan, the limit on annual additions that can be made to the plan on behalf of an employee is the lesser of $30,000 (for 2000) or 25 percent of the employee's compensation (sec. 415(c)). Annual additions include employer contributions, including contributions made at the election of the employee (i.e., employee elective deferrals), after-tax employee contributions, and any forfeitures allocated to the employee. For this purpose, compensation means taxable compensation of the employee, plus elective deferrals, and similar salary reduction contributions. A separate limit applies to benefits under a defined benefit plan.

For years before January 1, 2000, an overall limit applies if an employee is a participant in both a defined contribution plan and a defined benefit plan of the same employer.

Tax-sheltered annuities

In the case of a tax-sheltered annuity (a "section 403(b) annuity"), the annual contribution generally cannot exceed the lesser of the exclusion allowance or the section 415(c) defined contribution limit. The exclusion allowance for a year is equal to 20 percent of the employee's includible compensation, multiplied by the employee's years of service, minus excludable contributions for prior years under qualified plans, tax-sheltered annuities or section 457 plans of the employer.

[20] Another provision of the bill increases the dollar limit on elective deferrals under such arrangements.

[21] In the case of a section 457 plan, this catch-up rule does not apply during the participant's last 3 years before retirement (in those years, the regularly applicable dollar limit is doubled).

[22] Another provision of the bill provides that elective contributions are deductible without regard to the otherwise applicable deduction limits.

[23] Another provision of the bill provides for catch-up contributions to IRAs.

[24] A plan is not required to permit participants to make catch-up contributions.

[25] In the case of a section 457 plans, this catch-up rule does not apply during the participant's last 3 years before retirement. Under another provision in the bill, in those years, the regularly applicable dollar limit is doubled.

In addition to this general rule, employees of nonprofit educational institutions, hospitals, home health service agencies, health and welfare service agencies, and churches may elect application of one of several special rules that increase the amount of the otherwise permitted contributions. The election of a special rule is irrevocable; an employee may not elect to have more than one special rule apply.

Under one special rule, in the year the employee separates from service, the employee may elect to contribute up to the exclusion allowance, without regard to the 25 percent of compensation limit under section 415. Under this rule, the exclusion allowance is determined by taking into account no more than 10 years of service.

Under a second special rule, the employee may contribute up to the lesser of: (1) the exclusion allowance; (2) 25 percent of the participant's includible compensation; or (3) $15,000.

Under a third special rule, the employee may elect to contribute up to the section 415(c) limit, without regard to the exclusion allowance. If this option is elected, then contributions to other plans of the employer are also taken into account in applying the limit.

For purposes of determining the contribution limits applicable to section 403(b) annuities, includible compensation means the amount of compensation received from the employer for the most recent period which may be counted as a year of service under the exclusion allowance. In addition, includible compensation includes elective deferrals and similar salary reduction amounts.

Treasury regulations include provisions regarding application of the exclusion allowance in cases where the employee participates in a section 403(b) annuity and a defined benefit plan. The Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 directed the Secretary of the Treasury to revise these regulations, effective for years beginning after December 31, 1999, to reflect the repeal of the overall limit on contributions and benefits.

Section 457 plans

Compensation deferred under an eligible deferred compensation plan of a tax-exempt or State and local governmental employer (a "section 457 plan") is not includible in gross income until paid or made available. In general, the maximum permitted annual deferral under such a plan is the lesser of (1) $8,000 (in 2000) or (2) 33⅓ percent of compensation. The $8,000 limit is increased for inflation in $500 increments.

HOUSE BILL

Increase in defined contribution plan limit

The bill increases the 25 percent of compensation limitation on annual additions under a defined contribution plan to 100 percent.[26]

Conforming limits on tax-sheltered annuities

The bill repeals the exclusion allowance applicable to contributions to tax-sheltered annuities. Thus, such annuities are subject to the limits applicable to tax-qualified plans.

The bill also directs the Secretary of the Treasury to revise the regulations relating to the exclusion allowance under section 403(b)(2) to render void the requirement that contributions to a defined benefit plan be treated as previously excluded amounts for purposes of the exclusion allowance. For taxable years beginning after December 31, 1999, the regulatory provisions regarding the exclusion allowance are to be applied as if the requirement that contributions to a defined benefit plan be treated as previously excluded amounts for purposes of the exclusion allowance were void.

Section 457 plans

The bill increases the 33⅓ percent of compensation limitation on deferrals under a section 457 plan to 100 percent of compensation.

Effective date

The provision generally is effective for years beginning after December 31, 2000. The provision regarding the regulations under section 403(b)(2) is effective on the date of enactment.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

C. FASTER VESTING OF EMPLOYER MATCHING CONTRIBUTIONS (SEC. 303 OF THE HOUSE BILL, SEC. 303 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT, AND SEC. 411 OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

Under present law, a plan is not a qualified plan unless a participant's employer-provided benefit vests at least as rapidly as under one of two alternative minimum vesting schedules. A plan satisfies the first schedule if a participant acquires a nonforfeitable right to 100 percent of the participant's accrued benefit derived from employer contributions upon the completion of 5 years of service. A plan satisfies the second schedule if a participant has a nonforfeitable right to at least 20 percent of the participant's accrued benefit derived from employer contributions after 3 years of service, 40 percent after 4 years of service, 60 percent after 5 years of service, 80 percent after 6 years of service, and 100 percent after 7 years of service.[27]

HOUSE BILL

The bill applies faster vesting schedules to employer matching contributions. Under the provision, employer matching contributions must vest at least as rapidly as under one of the following two alternative minimum vesting schedules. A plan satisfies the first schedule if a participant acquires a nonforfeitable right to 100 percent of employer matching contributions upon the completion of 3 years of service. A plan satisfies the second schedule if a participant has a nonforfeitable right to 20 percent of employer matching contributions for each year of service beginning with the participant's second year of service and ending with 100 percent after 6 years of service.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for contributions for plan years beginning after December 31, 2000, with a delayed effective date for plans maintained pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement. The provision does not apply to any employee until the employee has an hour of service after the effective date. In applying the new vesting schedule, service before the effective date must be taken into account.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

D. SIMPLIFY AND UPDATE THE MINIMUM DISTRIBUTION RULES (SEC. 304 OF THE HOUSE BILL, SEC. 304 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT, AND SECS. 401(A)19 AND 457 OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

In general

Minimum distribution rules apply to all types of tax-favored retirement vehicles, including qualified plans, individual retirement arrangements ("IRAs"), tax-sheltered annuities ("section 403(b) annuities"), and eligible deferred compensation plans of tax-exempt and State and local government employers ("section 457 plans"). In general, under these rules, distribution of minimum benefits must begin no later than the required beginning date. Minimum distribution rules also apply to benefits payable with respect to a plan participant who has died. Failure to comply with the minimum distribution rules results in an excise tax imposed on the individual plan participant equal to 50 percent of the required minimum distribution not distributed for the year. The excise tax can be waived if the individual establishes to the satisfaction of the Secretary that the shortfall in the amount distributed was due to reasonable error and reasonable steps are being taken to remedy the shortfall.

Distributions prior to the death of the individual

In the case of distributions prior to the death of the plan participant, the minimum distribution rules are satisfied if either (1) the participant's entire interest in the plan is distributed by the required beginning date, or (2) the participant's interest in the plan is to be distributed (in accordance with regulations), beginning not later than the required beginning date, over a permissible period. The permissible periods are (1) the life of the participant, (2) the lives of the participant and a designated beneficiary, (3) the life expectancy of the participant, or (4) the joint life and last survivor expectancy of the participant and a designated beneficiary. In calculating minimum required distributions, life expectancies of the participant and the participant's spouse may be recomputed annually.

In the case of qualified plans, tax-sheltered annuities, and section 457 plans, the required beginning date is the April 1 of the calendar year following the later of (1) the calendar year in which the employee attains age 70½ or (2) the calendar year in which the employee retires. However, in the case of a 5-percent owner of the employer, distributions are required to begin no later than the April 1 of the calendar year following the year in which the 5-percent owner attains age 70½. If commencement of benefits is delayed beyond age 70½ from a defined benefit plan, then the accrued benefit of the employee must be actuarially increased to take into account the period after age 70½ in which the employee was not receiving benefits under the plan.[28] In the case of distributions from an IRA other than a Roth IRA, the required beginning date is the April 1 following the calendar year in which the IRA owner attains age 70½. The pre-death minimum distribution rules do not apply to Roth IRAs.

[26] Another provision of the bill increases the defined contribution plan dollar limit.

[27] The minimum vesting requirements are also contained in Title I of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, as amended ("ERISA").

[28] State and local government plans and church plans are not required to actuarially increase benefits that begin after age 70½.

In general, under proposed regulations, in order to satisfy the minimum distribution rules, annuity payments under a defined benefit plan must be paid in periodic payments made at intervals not longer than one year over a permissible period, and must be nonincreasing, or increase only as a result of the following: (1) cost-of-living adjustments; (2) cash refunds of employee contributions; (3) benefit increases under the plan; or (4) an adjustment due to death of the employee's beneficiary. In the case of a defined contribution plan, the minimum required distribution is determined by dividing the employee's benefit by the applicable life expectancy.

Distributions after the death of the plan participant

The minimum distribution rules also apply to distributions to beneficiaries of deceased participants. In general, if the participant dies after minimum distributions have begun, the remaining interest must be distributed at least as rapidly as under the minimum distribution method being used as of the date of death. If the participant dies before minimum distributions have begun, then the entire remaining interest must generally be distributed within 5 years of the participant's death. The 5-year rule does not apply if distributions begin within 1 year of the participant's death and are payable over the life of a designated beneficiary or over the life expectancy of a designated beneficiary. A surviving spouse beneficiary is not required to begin distribution until the date the deceased participant would have attained age 70½.

HOUSE BILL

Modification of post-death distribution rules

The provision applies the present-law rules applicable if the participant dies before distribution of minimum benefits has begun to all post-death distributions. Thus, in general, if the employee dies before his or her entire interest has been distributed, distribution of the remaining interest is required to be made within 5 years of the date of death, or begin within one year of the date of death and paid over the life or life expectancy of a designated beneficiary. In the case of a surviving spouse, distributions are not required to begin until the April 1 of the calendar year following the year in which the surviving spouse attains age 70½. Minimum distributions that have already begun could be recalculated under the new rule.

Reduction in excise tax

The bill reduces the excise tax on failures to satisfy the minimum distribution rules to 10 percent of the amount that was required to be distributed but was not distributed.

Treasury regulations

The Secretary of the Treasury is directed to update, simplify, and finalize the regulations relating to the minimum distribution rules and to reflect in such regulations current life expectancies and to revise the required distribution methods so that, under reasonable assumptions, the amount of the required distribution does not decrease over time. The regulations are to permit recalculation of distributions for future years to reflect the change in the regulations, and to permit the election of a new designated beneficiary and method of calculating life expectancy. The regulations are to be effective for years beginning after December 31, 2000, and are to apply to individuals regardless of whether minimum distributions had begun.

Effective date

In general, the provision is effective for years beginning after December 31, 2000. The provision regarding Treasury regulations is effective on the date of enactment.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill, except that the Senate amendment provides that final Treasury regulations are to be issued no later than December 31, 2001, and the Senate amendment does not require that such regulations are to be effective for years beginning after December 31, 2000.

Effective date.—Same as the House bill.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

Effective date.—In general, the provision is effective for years beginning after December 31, 2000. The provision regarding Treasury regulations is effective on the date of enactment. The conference agreement also provides a transition rule with respect to the provision providing that the required beginning date in the case of a surviving spouse is no earlier than the April 1 of the calendar year after the surviving spouse attains age 70½. The conference agreement provides that, in the case of an individual who died before the date of enactment and prior to his or her required beginning date and whose beneficiary is the surviving spouse, minimum distributions to the surviving spouse are not required to begin earlier than the date distributions would have been required to begin under present law.

E. CLARIFICATION OF TAX TREATMENT OF DIVISION OF SECTION 457 PLAN BENEFITS UPON DIVORCE (SEC. 305 OF THE HOUSE BILL, SEC. 305 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT, AND SEC. 457 OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

Under present law, benefits provided under a qualified retirement plan for a participant may not be assigned or alienated to creditors of the participant, except in very limited circumstances. One exception to the prohibition on assignment or alienation rule is a qualified domestic relations order ("QDRO"). A QDRO is a domestic relations order that creates or recognizes a right of an alternate payee to any plan benefit payable with respect to a participant, and that meets certain procedural requirements.

Under present law, a distribution from a governmental plan or a church plan is treated as made pursuant to a QDRO if it is made pursuant to a domestic relations order that creates or recognizes a right of an alternate payee to any plan benefit payable with respect to a participant. Such distributions are not required to meet the procedural requirements that apply with respect to distributions from qualified plans.

Under present law, amounts distributed from a qualified plan generally are taxable to the participant in the year of distribution. However, if amounts are distributed to the spouse (or former spouse) of the participant by reason of a QDRO, the benefits are taxable to the spouse (or former spouse). Amounts distributed pursuant to a QDRO to an alternate payee other than the spouse (or former spouse) are taxable to the plan participant.

Section 457 of the Internal Revenue Code provides rules for deferral of compensation by an individual participating in an eligible deferred compensation plan ("section 457 plan") of a tax-exempt or State and local government employer. The QDRO rules do not apply to section 457 plans.

HOUSE BILL

The bill applies the taxation rules for qualified plan distributions pursuant to a QDRO to distributions made pursuant to a domestic relations order from a section 457 plan. In addition, a section 457 plan is not treated as violating the restrictions on distributions from such plans due to payments to an alternate payee under a QDRO. The special rule applicable to governmental plans and church plans applies for purposes of determining whether a distribution is pursuant to a QDRO.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for transfers, distributions, and payments made after December 31, 2000.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill, with a modification to the effective date.

Effective date.—The provision relating to taxation of distributions is effective for transfers, distributions, and payments made after December 31, 2000. The other provisions are effective on January 1, 2001, except that, in the case of a domestic relations order entered into before such date, the plan administrator (1) shall treat such order as a QDRO if the administrator is paying benefits pursuant to the order and (2) may treat any other such order entered into before the effective date as a QDRO.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

F. MODIFICATIONS RELATING TO HARDSHIP WITHDRAWALS (SEC. 306 OF THE HOUSE BILL, SEC. 306 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT AND SECS. 401(K) AND 402 OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

Elective deferrals under a qualified cash or deferred arrangement (a "section 401(k) plan") may not be distributable prior to the occurrence of one or more specified events. One event upon which distribution is permitted is the financial hardship of the employee. Applicable Treasury regulations[29] provide that a distribution is made on account of hardship only if the distribution is made on account of an immediate and heavy financial need of the employee and is necessary to satisfy the heavy need.

The Treasury regulations provide a safe harbor under which a distribution may be deemed necessary to satisfy an immediate and heavy financial need. One requirement of this safe harbor is that the employee be prohibited from making elective contributions and employee contributions to the plan and all other plans maintained by the employer for at least 12 months after receipt of the hardship distribution.

Under present law, hardship withdrawals of elective deferrals from a qualified cash or deferred arrangement (or 403(b) annuity) are not eligible rollover distributions. Other types of hardship distributions, e.g., employer matching contributions distributed on account of hardship, are eligible rollover distributions. Different withholding rules apply to distributions that are eligible rollover distributions and to distributions that are not eligible rollover distributions. Eligible rollover distributions that are not directly rolled over are subject to withholding at a flat rate of 20-percent. Distributions that are not eligible rollover distributions are subject to elective withholding. Periodic distributions are subject to withholding as if the distribution were wages; nonperiodic distributions are subject to withholding at a rate of 10 percent. In either case, the individual may elect not to have withholding apply.

HOUSE BILL

The Secretary of the Treasury is directed to revise the applicable regulations to reduce from 12 months to 6 months the period during which an employee must be prohibited from making elective contributions and employee contributions in order for a distribution to be deemed necessary to satisfy an immediate and heavy financial need. The revised regulations are to be effective for years beginning after December 31, 2000.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill, except that the Senate amendment also provides that any hardship distribution made pursuant to the terms of a plan is not an eligible rollover distribution. Thus, such distributions may not be rolled over, and are subject to the withholding rules applicable to distributions that are not eligible rollover distributions. The bill does not modify the rules under which hardship distributions may be made. For example, as under present law, hardship distributions of qualified employer matching contributions may only be made under the rules applicable to elective deferrals.

Effective date.—The provision directing the Secretary to revise the rules relating to safe harbor hardship distributions is effective on the date of enactment.

The provision providing that hardship distributions are not eligible rollover distributions is effective for distributions made after December 31, 2000. The Secretary has the authority to issue transitional guidance with respect to this provision to provide sufficient time for plans to implement the new rule.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

Effective date.—The provision directing the Secretary to revise the regulations relating to safe harbor hardship distributions is effective on the date of enactment. The provision relating to rollover of hardship distributions is generally effective for distributions after December 31, 2001. For distributions occurring during calendar year 2001, a plan may treat a distribution that is a hardship distribution under the terms of the plan as not an eligible rollover distribution for all purposes of the Code. Thus, for example, if a plan treats a hardship distribution made in 2001 as not an eligible rollover distribution, the distribution could not be rolled over and the withholding rules applicable to distributions that are not eligible rollover distributions would apply.

G. Pension Coverage for Domestic and Similar Workers (sec. 307 of the Senate amendment and sec. 4972 of the Code)

PRESENT LAW

Under present law, within limits, employers may make deductible contributions to qualified retirement plans for employees. Subject to certain exceptions, a 10-percent excise tax applies to nondeductible contributions to such plans.

Employers of household workers may establish a pension plan for such workers. Contributions to such plans are not deductible because they are not made in connection with a trade or business of the employer.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

Under the provision, the 10-percent excise tax on nondeductible contributions does not apply to contributions to a SIMPLE plan or a SIMPLE IRA which are nondeductible solely because the contributions are not a trade or business expense under section 162 because they are not made in connection with a trade or business of the employer. Thus, for example, employers of household workers could make contributions to such plans without imposition of the excise tax. As under present law, the contributions are not deductible. The present-law rules applicable to such plans, e.g., contribution limits and nondiscrimination rules, continue to apply. The provision does not apply with respect to contributions on behalf of the employer and members of his or her family.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference follows the Senate amendment, except that the conference agreement does not limit the waiver of the excise tax to contributions to a SIMPLE plan or SIMPLE IRA. The conference agreement provides that the 10-percent excise tax on nondeductible contributions does not apply to contributions to a SIMPLE IRA or plan, SEP, or qualified plan which are not deductible solely because the contributions are not made in connection with a trade or business of the taxpayer. Thus, for example, employers of household workers could make contributions to such plans without imposition of the excise tax. As under present law, the contributions are not deductible. The present-law rules applicable to such plans, e.g., contribution limits and nondiscrimination rules, continue to apply. The provision does not apply with respect to contributions on behalf of the employer and members of his or her family. For this purpose, family members include the individual, the individual's brothers and sisters, the brothers and sisters of the individual's parents and grandparents, and ancestors and lineal descendants of the foregoing, and a spouse of any of the foregoing.

No inference is intended with respect to application of the excise tax under present law to contributions that are not deductible because they are not made in connection with a trade or business of the employer.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000.

Subtitle D. Increasing Portability for Participants (secs. 431–439 of the bill)

A. Rollovers of Retirement Plan and IRA Distributions (secs. 401–403 of the House bill, sec. 401–403 of the Senate amendment and secs. 401, 402, 403(b), 408, 457, and 3405 of the Code)

PRESENT LAW

In general

Present law permits the rollover of funds from a tax-favored retirement plan to another tax-favored retirement plan. The rules that apply depend on the type of plan involved. Similarly, the rules regarding the tax treatment of amounts that are not rolled over depend on the type of plan involved.

Distributions from qualified plans

Under present law, an "eligible rollover distribution" from a tax-qualified employer-sponsored retirement plan may be rolled over tax free to a traditional individual retirement arrangement ("IRA")[30] or another qualified plan.[31] An "eligible rollover distribution" means any distribution to an employee of all or any portion of the balance to the credit of the employee in a qualified plan, except the term does not include (1) any distribution which is one of a series of substantially equal periodic payments made (a) for the life (or life expectancy) of the employee or the joint lives (or joint life expectancies) of the employee and the employee's designated beneficiary, or (b) for a specified period of 10 years or more, (2) any distribution to the extent such distribution is required under the minimum distribution rules, and (3) certain hardship distributions. The maximum amount that can be rolled over is the amount of the distribution includible in income, i.e., after-tax employee contributions cannot be rolled over. Qualified plans are not required to accept rollovers.

Distributions from tax-sheltered annuities

Eligible rollover distributions from a tax-sheltered annuity ("section 403(b) annuity") may be rolled over into an IRA or another section 403(b) annuity. Distributions from a section 403(b) annuity cannot be rolled over into a tax-qualified plan. Section 403(b) annuities are not required to accept rollovers.

IRA distributions

Distributions from a traditional IRA, other than minimum required distributions, can be rolled over into another IRA. In general, distributions from an IRA cannot be rolled over into a qualified plan or section 403(b) annuity. An exception to this rule applies in the case of so-called "conduit IRAs." Under the conduit IRA rule, amounts can be rolled from a qualified plan into an IRA and then subsequently rolled back to another qualified plan if the amounts in the IRA are attributable solely to rollovers from a qualified plan. Similarly, an amount may be rolled over from a section 403(b) annuity to an IRA and subsequently rolled back into a section 403(b) annuity if the amounts in the IRA are attributable solely to rollovers from a section 403(b) annuity.

Distributions from section 457 plans

A "section 457 plan" is an eligible deferred compensation plan of a State or local government or tax-exempt employer that meets certain requirements. In some cases, different rules apply under section 457 to governmental plans and plans of tax-exempt employers. For example, governmental section 457 plans are like qualified plans in that plan assets are required to be held in a trust for the exclusive benefit of plan participants and beneficiaries. In contrast, benefits under a section 457 plan of a tax-exempt employer are unfunded, like nonqualified deferred compensation plans of private employers.

Section 457 benefits can be transferred to another section 457 plan. Distributions from a section 457 plan cannot be rolled over to another section 457 plan, a qualified plan, a section 403(b) annuity, or an IRA.

Rollovers by surviving spouses

A surviving spouse that receives an eligible rollover distribution may roll over the distribution into an IRA, but not a qualified plan or section 403(b) annuity.

Direct rollovers and withholding requirements

Qualified plans and section 403(b) annuities are required to provide that a plan participant has the right to elect that an eligible rollover distribution be directly rolled over to another eligible retirement plan. If the plan participant does not elect the direct rollover option, then withholding is required on the distribution at a 20-percent rate.[12]

---

[30] A "traditional" IRA refers to IRAs other than Roth IRAs or SIMPLE IRAs. All references to IRAs in the description of this provision refer only to traditional IRAs.

[31] An eligible rollover distribution may either be rolled over by the distributee within 60 days of the date of the distribution or, as described below, directly rolled over by the distributing plan.

The direct rollover rules do not apply to section 457 plans. Distributions from a section 457 plan are subject to wage withholding.

Notice of eligible rollover distribution

The plan administrator of a qualified plan or a section 403(b) annuity is required to provide a written explanation of rollover rules to individuals who receive a distribution eligible for rollover. In general, the notice is to be provided within a reasonable period of time before making the distribution and is to include an explanation of (1) the provisions under which the individual may have the distribution directly rolled over to another eligible retirement plan, (2) the provision that requires withholding if the distribution is not directly rolled over, (3) the provision under which the distribution may be rolled over within 60 days of receipt, and (4) if applicable, certain other rules that may apply to the distribution. The Secretary has provided more specific guidance regarding timing and content of the notice and has issued a safe harbor notice that is deemed to satisfy the requirements regarding the content of the notice.

Taxation of distributions

As is the case with the rollover rules, different rules regarding taxation of benefits apply to different types of tax-favored arrangements. In general, distributions from a qualified plan, section 403(b) annuity, or IRA are includible in income in the year received. In certain cases, distributions from qualified plans are eligible for capital gains treatment and averaging. These rules do not apply to distributions from another type of plan. Distributions from a qualified plan, IRA, and section 403(b) annuity generally are subject to an additional 10-percent early withdrawal tax if made before age 59½. There are a number of exceptions to the early withdrawal tax. Some of the exceptions apply to all three types of plans, and others apply only to certain types of plans. For example, the 10-percent early withdrawal tax does not apply to IRA distributions for educational expenses, but does apply to similar distributions from qualified plans and section 403(b) annuities. Benefits under a section 457 plan are generally includible in income when paid or made available. The 10-percent early withdrawal tax does not apply to section 457 plans.

HOUSE BILL

In general

The bill provides that eligible rollover distributions from qualified retirement plans, section 403(b) annuities, and governmental section 457 plans generally may be rolled over to any of such plans or arrangements. Similarly, distributions from an IRA generally may be rolled over into a qualified plan, section 403(b) annuity, or governmental section 457 plan. The direct rollover and withholding rules are extended to distributions from a governmental section 457 plan, and such plans are required to provide the written notification regarding eligible rollover distributions.[13] The rollover notice (with respect to all plans) is required to include a description of the provisions under which distributions from the plan to which the distribution is rolled over may be subject to restrictions and tax consequences different than those applicable to distributions from the distributing plan. Qualified plans, section 403(b) annuities, and section 457 plans are not required to accept rollovers.

Some special rules apply in certain cases. A distribution from a qualified plan is not eligible for capital gains or averaging treatment if there was a rollover to the plan that would not have been permitted under present law. Thus, in order to preserve capital gains and averaging treatment for a qualified plan distribution that is rolled over, the rollover must be made to a "conduit IRA" as under present law, and then rolled back into a qualified plan. Amounts distributed from a section 457 plan are subject to the early withdrawal tax to the extent the distribution consists of amounts attributable to rollovers from another type of plan. Section 457 plans are required to separately account for such amounts.

Rollover of after-tax contributions

The bill provides that employee after-tax contributions may be rolled over into another qualified plan or a traditional IRA. In the case of a rollover from a qualified plan to another qualified plan, the rollover may be accomplished only through a direct rollover. In addition, a qualified plan is permitted to accept rollovers of after-tax contributions only if the plan provides separate accounting for such contributions (and earnings thereon). After-tax contributions (including nondeductible contributions to an IRA) may not be rolled over from an IRA into a qualified plan, tax-sheltered annuity, or section 457 plan.

In the case of a distribution from a traditional IRA that is rolled over into an eligible rollover plan that is not an IRA, the distribution is attributed first to amounts other than after-tax contributions.

Expansion of spousal rollovers

The bill provides that surviving spouses may roll over distributions to a qualified plan, section 403(b) annuity, or governmental section 457 plan in which the surviving spouse participates.

Treasury regulations

The Secretary is directed to prescribe rules necessary to carry out the provisions. Such rules may include, for example, reporting requirements and mechanisms to address mistakes relating to rollovers. It is expected that the IRS will develop forms to assist individuals who roll over after-tax contributions to an IRA in keeping track of such contributions. Such forms could, for example, expand Form 8606—Nondeductible IRAs, to include information regarding after-tax contributions.

Effective date

The provisions are effective for distributions after December 31, 2000.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

Effective date.—The provisions are effective for distributions after December 31, 2001.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment. The conferees intend that the Secretary will revise the safe harbor rollover notice that plans may use to satisfy the rollover requirements. Until issuance of a new notice, the conferees intend that a plan will be treated as complying with the notice requirement if the plan makes a reasonable, good faith effort to comply. For example, the bill requires that the rollover notice include a description of the provisions under which distributions from the eligible retirement plan receiving the distribution may be subject to restrictions and tax consequences which are different from those applicable to distributions from the plan making the distribution. A plan will be treated as making a reasonable good faith effort to comply with this requirement if the notice states that distributions from the plan to which the rollover is made may be subject to different restrictions and tax consequences than those that apply to distributions from the plan from which the rollover is made.

Effective date.—The provisions are effective for distributions after December 31, 2000, except that the provision allowing after-tax contributions to be rolled over is effective for distributions after December 31, 2001.

B. WAIVER OF 60-DAY RULE (SEC. 404 OF THE HOUSE BILL, SEC. 404 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT, AND SECS. 402 AND 408 OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

Under present law, amounts received from an IRA or qualified plan may be rolled over tax free if the rollover is made within 60 days of the date of the distribution. The Secretary does not have the authority to waive the 60-day requirement.

HOUSE BILL

The bill provides that the Secretary may waive the 60-day rollover period if the failure to waive such requirement would be against equity or good conscience, including cases of casualty, disaster, or other events beyond the reasonable control of the individual subject to such requirement.

Effective date.—The provision applies to distributions made after December 31, 2000.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

C. TREATMENT OF FORMS OF DISTRIBUTION (SEC. 405 OF THE HOUSE BILL, SEC. 405 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT, AND SEC. 411(D)(6) OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

An amendment of a qualified retirement plan may not decrease the accrued benefit of a plan participant. An amendment is treated as reducing an accrued benefit if, with respect to benefits accrued before the amendment is adopted, the amendment has the effect of either (1) eliminating or reducing an early retirement benefit or a retirement-type subsidy, or (2) except as provided by Treasury regulations, eliminating an optional form of benefit (sec. 411(d)(6)).[14]

[12] Distributions from qualified plans and section 403(b) annuities that are not eligible rollover distributions are subject to elective withholding. Periodic distributions are subject to withholding as if the distribution were wages; nonperiodic distributions are subject to withholding at a rate of 10 percent. In either case, the individual may elect not to have withholding apply.

[13] The elective withholding rules applicable to distributions from qualified plans and section 403(b) annuities that are not eligible rollover distributions are also extended to distributions from governmental section 457 plans. Thus, periodic distributions from governmental section 457 plans that are not eligible rollover distributions are subject to withholding as if the distribution were wages and nonperiodic distributions from such plans that are not eligible rollover distributions are subject to withholding at a 10-percent rate. In either case, the individual may elect not to have withholding apply.

[14] A similar provision is contained in Title I of ERISA.

The Treasury Department has recently issued final regulations specifying situations in which optional forms of benefit may be eliminated. These regulations provide that, if certain requirements are satisfied, optional forms of benefit may be eliminated or reduced in connection with the voluntary transfer of benefits between defined contribution plans in connection with an asset or stock acquisition, merger, or other similar transaction involving a change in employer or in connection with the participant's change in employment status to an employment status with respect to which the participant is not entitled to additional allocations under the transferor plan.[35] The regulations also permit defined contribution plans to eliminate or restrict optional forms of benefit if the participant is entitled to receive a single-sum distribution that is otherwise identical to the optional form of benefit that is being eliminated or restricted.[36]

A plan that is a transferee of a plan that is subject to the joint and survivor rules is also subject to those rules.

HOUSE BILL

Transfers between defined contribution plans

A defined contribution plan to which benefits are transferred is not treated as reducing a participant's or beneficiary's accrued benefit even though it does not provide all of the forms of distribution previously available under the transferor plan if (1) the plan receives from another defined contribution plan a direct transfer of the participant's or beneficiary's benefit accrued under the transferor plan, or the plan results from a merger or other transaction that has the effect of a direct transfer (including consolidations of benefits attributable to different employers within a multiple employer plan), (2) the terms of both the transferor plan and the transferee plan authorize the transfer, (3) the transfer occurs pursuant to a voluntary election by the participant or beneficiary that is made after the participant or beneficiary received a notice describing the consequences of making the election, (4) in the case of a plan that provides for an annuity as the normal form of distribution in accordance with the joint and survivor rules (sec. 417), the participant's spouse (if any) consents to the transfer in a manner similar to the consent required by section 417, and (5) the transferee plan allows the participant or beneficiary to receive distribution of his or her benefit under the transferee plan in the form of a single sum distribution. The bill does not modify the rules relating to survivor annuities under section 417. Thus, as under present law, a plan that is a transferee of a plan subject to the joint and survivor rules is also subject to those rules.

Elimination of optional forms of benefit in the case of defined contribution plans offering a single-sum distribution

Except to the extent provided by the Secretary of the Treasury in regulations, a defined contribution plan is not treated as reducing a participant's accrued benefit if (1) a plan amendment eliminates a form of distribution previously available under the plan, (2) a single sum distribution is available to the participant at the same time or times as the form of distribution eliminated by the amendment, and (3) the single sum distribution is based on the same or greater portion of the participant's accrued benefit as the form of distribution eliminated by the amendment.

Early retirement benefits, retirement-type subsidies, and optional forms of benefit

The provision directs the Secretary of the Treasury to provide by regulations that the prohibitions against eliminating or reducing an early retirement benefit, a retirement-type subsidy, or an optional form of benefit shall not apply to plan amendments that do not adversely affect the rights of participants in a material manner but that do eliminate or reduce early retirement benefits, retirement-type subsidies, and optional forms of benefit that create significant burdens and complexities for a plan and its participants.

It is intended that the factors to be considered in determining whether an amendment has a materially adverse effect on a participant would include (1) all of the participant's early retirement benefits, retirement-type subsidies, and optional forms of benefits that are reduced or eliminated by the amendment, (2) the extent to which early retirement benefits, retirement-type subsidies, and optional forms of benefit in effect with respect to a participant after the amendment effective date provide rights that are comparable to the rights that are reduced or eliminated by the plan amendment, (3) the number of years before the participant attains normal retirement age under the plan (or early retirement age, as applicable), (4) the size of the participant's benefit that is affected by the plan amendment, in relation to the amount of the participant's compensation, and (5) the number of years before the plan amendment is effective.

Treasury regulations

The Secretary is directed to issue, not later than December 31, 2001, final regulations under section 411(d)(6), including regulations required under the provision.

Effective date

The provision is effective for years beginning after December 31, 2000, except that the direction to the Secretary is effective on the date of enactment.

SENATE AMENDMENT

Transfers between defined contribution plans

The Senate amendment provision regarding transfers of defined contribution plan benefits is the same as the House bill, except that the Senate amendment does not include the requirement that, in the case of a plan with an annuity as the normal form of distribution, the spouse, if any, must consent to the transfer. As under present law, a plan that is a transferee of a plan subject to the joint and survivor rules is subject to the joint and survivor rules.

Elimination of optional forms of benefit in the case of defined contribution plans offering a single-sum distribution

The Senate amendment does not include the provision regarding elimination of forms of distribution in the case of plans offering a lump sum.

Early retirement benefits, retirement-type subsidies, and optional forms of benefit

The Senate amendment directs the Secretary of the Treasury to provide by regulations that the prohibitions against eliminating or reducing an early retirement benefit, a retirement-type subsidy, or an optional form of benefit do not apply to plan amendments that eliminate or reduce early retirement benefits, retirement-type subsidies, and optional forms of benefit that create significant burdens and complexities for a plan and its participants, but only if such an amendment does not adversely affect the rights of any participant in more than a de minimis manner.

For this purpose, the factors to be considered in determining whether an amendment has more than a de minimis adverse effect on any participant include (1) all of the participant's early retirement benefits, retirement-type subsidies, and optional forms of benefits that are reduced or eliminated by the amendment, (2) the extent to which early retirement benefits, retirement-type subsidies, and optional forms of benefit in effect with respect to a participant after the amendment effective date provide rights that are comparable to the rights that are reduced or eliminated by the plan amendment, (3) the number of years before the participant attains normal retirement age under the plan (or early retirement age, as applicable), (4) the amount of the participant's benefit that is affected by the plan amendment, in relation to the amount of the participant's compensation,[37] and (5) the number of years before the plan amendment is effective.

Treasury regulations

The provision regarding issuance of Treasury regulations is the same as the House bill.

Effective date

The effective date of the Senate amendment provision is the same as the House bill.[38]

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

Transfers between defined contribution plans

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

Elimination of optional forms of benefit in the case of defined contribution plans offering a single-sum distribution

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

Early retirement benefits, retirement-type subsidies, and optional forms of benefit

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment. As under the Senate amendment, the Secretary is directed to provide by regulation that the prohibitions against eliminating or reducing an early retirement benefit, a retirement-type subsidy, or an optional form of benefit do not apply to plan amendments that eliminate or reduce early retirement benefits, retirement-type subsidies, and optional forms of benefit that create significant burdens and complexities for a plan and its participants and that do not adversely affect the rights of any participant in more than a de minimis manner.

For this purpose, the factors to be considered in determining whether an amendment has more than a de minimis adverse effect on any participant include (1) all of the participant's early retirement benefits, retirement-type subsidies, and optional forms of benefits that are reduced or eliminated by the amendment, (2) the extent to which early retirement benefits, retirement-type subsidies, and optional forms of benefit in effect with respect to a participant after the amendment effective date provide rights that are comparable to the rights that are reduced or eliminated by the plan amendment, (3) the number of years before the participant attains normal retirement age under the plan (or early retirement age, as applicable), (4) the amount of the participant's benefit that is affected by the plan amendment, in relation to the amount of the participant's compensation,[39] and (5) the number of years before the plan amendment is effective.

[36] Treas. reg. sec. 1.411(d)-4 Q&A-2, paragraph (e).

[37] In determining the amount of any subsidy under the provision, it is expected that the regulations will value the subsidy by reference to the date on which it would be the most valuable with respect to the participant.

[38] The Senate amendment also amends the corresponding provisions of ERISA.

This provision of the bill does not affect the rules relating to involuntary cash outs (sec. 411(a)(11))[40] or survivor annuity requirements (sec. 417). Accordingly, if a participant is entitled to protections of the joint and survivor rules, those protections may not be eliminated. The intent of the provision authorizing regulations is solely to permit the elimination of early retirement benefits, retirement-type subsidies, or optional forms of benefit that have no more than a de minimis effect on any participant but create disproportionate burdens and complexities for a plan and its participants.

For example, assume the following. Employer A acquires employer B and merges B's defined benefit plan into A's defined benefit plan. The defined benefit plan maintained by B before the merger provides an early retirement subsidy for individuals age 55 with a specified number of years of service. E1 and E2 are were employees of B and who transfer to A in connection with the merger. E1 is 25 years old and has compensation of $40,000. The present value of E's early retirement subsidy under B's plan is $75. E2 is 50 years old and also has compensation of $40,000. The present value of Y's early retirement subsidy under B's plan is $10,000.

Assume that A's plan has an early retirement subsidy for individuals who have attained age 50 with a specified number of years of service, but the subsidy is not the same as under B's plan. Under A's plan, the present value of E2's early retirement subsidy is $9,500. Maintenance of both subsidies would create burdens for the plan and complexities for the plan and its participants.

Treasury regulations could permit E1's early retirement subsidy under B's plan to be eliminated entirely (i.e., even if A's plan did not have an early retirement subsidy). Taking into account all relevant factors, including the value of the benefit, E1's compensation, and the number of years until E1 would be eligible to receive the subsidy, the subsidy is de minimis. Treasury regulations could permit E2's early retirement subsidy under B's plan to be eliminated as to be replaced by the subsidy under A's plan, because the difference in the subsidies is de minimis. However, A's subsidy could not be entirely eliminated.

Treasury regulations

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment, except that the conference agreement provides that the Secretary is to issue the required regulations not later than December 31, 2002. Such regulations are to be effective for plan years beginning after December 31, 2002, or such earlier date as is specified by the Secretary.

Effective date

The provision is effective for years beginning after December 31, 2000, except that the direction to the Secretary is effective on the date of enactment.

D. RATIONALIZATION OF RESTRICTIONS ON DISTRIBUTIONS (SEC. 406 OF THE HOUSE BILL, SEC. 406 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT, AND SECS. 401(K), 403(B), AND 457 OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

Elective deferrals under a qualified cash or deferred arrangement ("section 401(k) plan"), tax-sheltered annuity ("section 403(b) annuity"), or an eligible deferred compensation plan of a tax-exempt organization or State or local government ("section 457 plan"), may not be distributable prior to the occurrence of one or more specified events. These permissible distributable events include "separation from service."

A separation from service occurs only upon a participant's death, retirement, resignation or discharge, and not when the employee continues on the same job for a different employer as a result of the liquidation, merger, consolidation or other similar corporate transaction. A severance from employment occurs when a participant ceases to be employed by the employer that maintains the plan. Under a so-called "same desk rule," a participant's severance from employment does not necessarily result in a separation from service.[41]

In addition to separation from service and other events, a section 401(k) plan that is maintained by a corporation may permit distributions to certain employees who experience a severance from employment with the corporation that maintains the plan but does not experience a separation from service because the employee continues on the same job for a different employer as a result of a corporate transaction. If the corporation disposes of substantially all of the assets used by the corporation in a trade or business, a distributable event occurs with respect to the accounts of the employees who continue employment with the corporation that acquires the assets. If the corporation disposes of its interest in a subsidiary, a distributable event occurs with respect to the accounts of the employees who continue employment with the subsidiary.

HOUSE BILL

The bill modifies the distribution restrictions applicable to section 401(k) plans, section 403(b) annuities, and section 457 plans to provide that distribution may occur upon severance from employment rather than separation from service. In addition, the provisions for distribution from a section 401(k) plan based upon a corporation's disposition of its assets or a subsidiary is repealed; this special rule is no longer necessary as a result of the changes made by the provision.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for distributions after December 31, 2000, regardless of when the severance of employment occurred.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

E. PURCHASE OF SERVICE CREDIT UNDER GOVERNMENTAL PENSION PLANS (SEC. 407 OF THE HOUSE BILL, SEC. 407 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT, AND SECS. 403(B) AND 457 OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

A qualified retirement plan maintained by a State or local government employer may provide that a participant may make after-tax employee contributions in order to purchase permissive service credit, subject to certain limits (sec. 415). Permissive service credit means credit for a period of service recognized by the governmental plan only if the employee voluntarily contributes to the plan an amount (as determined by the plan) that does not exceed the amount necessary to fund the benefit attributable to the period of service and that is in addition to the regular employee contributions, if any, under the plan.

In the case of any repayment of contributions and earnings to a governmental plan with respect to an amount previously refunded upon a forfeiture of service credit under the plan (or another plan maintained by a State or local government employer within the same State), any such repayment is not taken into account for purposes of the section 415 limits on contributions and benefits. Also, service credit obtained as a result of such a repayment is not considered permissive service credit for purposes of the section 415 limits.

A participant may not use a rollover or direct transfer of benefits from a tax-sheltered annuity ("section 403(b) annuity") or an eligible deferred compensation plan of a tax-exempt organization of a State or local government ("section 457 plan") to purchase permissive service credits or repay contributions and earnings with respect to a forfeiture of service credit.

HOUSE BILL

A participant in a State or local governmental plan is not required to include in gross income a direct trustee-to-trustee transfer to a governmental defined benefit plan from a section 403(b) annuity or a section 457 plan if the transferred amount is used (1) to purchase permissive service credits under the plan, or (2) to repay contributions and earnings with respect to an amount previously refunded under a forfeiture of service credit under the plan (or another plan maintained by a State or local government employer within the same State).

Effective date.—The provision is effective for transfers after December 31, 2000.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

F. EMPLOYERS MAY DISREGARD ROLLOVERS FOR PURPOSES OF CASH-OUT RULES (SEC. 408 OF THE HOUSE BILL, SEC. 408 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT, AND SEC. 411(A)(11) OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

If an qualified retirement plan participant ceases to be employed by the employer that maintains the plan, the plan may distribute the participant's nonforfeitable accrued benefit without the consent of the participant and, if applicable, the participant's spouse, if the present value of the benefit does not exceed $5,000. If such an involuntary distribution occurs and the participant subsequently returns to employment covered by the plan, then service taken into account in computing benefits payable under the plan after the return need not include service with respect to which a benefit was involuntarily distributed unless the employee repays the benefit.[42]

---

[39] In determining the amount of any subsidy under the provision, it is expected that the regulations will value the subsidy by reference to the date on which it would be the most valuable with respect to the participant.

[40] Another provision of the bill provides that rollover amounts are not taken into account for purposes of the cash-out rules.

[41] Rev. Rul. 79-336, 1979-2 C.B. 187.

[42] A similar provision is contained in Title I of ERISA.

Generally, a participant may roll over an involuntary distribution from a qualified plan to an IRA or to another qualified plan.[43]

HOUSE BILL

For purposes of the cash-out rule, a plan is permitted to provide that the present value of a participant's nonforfeitable accrued benefit is determined without regard to the portion of such benefit that is attributable to rollover contributions (and any earnings allocable thereto).

Effective date.—The provision is effective for distributions after December 31, 2000.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

G. MINIMUM DISTRIBUTION AND INCLUSION REQUIREMENTS FOR SECTION 457 PLANS (SEC. 409 OF THE HOUSE BILL, SEC. 409 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT, AND SEC. 457 OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

A "section 457 plan" is an eligible deferred compensation plan of a State or local government or tax-exempt employer that meets certain requirements. For example, amounts deferred under a section 457 plan cannot exceed certain limits. Amounts deferred under a section 457 plan are generally includible in income when paid or made available. Amounts deferred under a plan of deferred compensation of a State or local government or tax-exempt employer that does not meet the requirements of section 457 are includible in income when the amounts are not subject to a substantial risk of forfeiture, regardless of whether the amounts have been paid or made available.[44]

Section 457 plans are subject to the minimum distribution rules applicable to tax-qualified pension plans. In addition, such plans are subject to additional minimum distribution rules (sec. 457(d)(2)(B)).

The limits on section 457 plans were first applied to plans of tax-exempt employers pursuant to the Tax Reform Act of 1986 (the "1986 Act"), generally effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1986. The limitations of section 457 do not apply to amounts deferred under a plan of a tax-exempt employer by an individual covered under such a plan on August 16, 1986, if the amounts (1) were deferred from taxable years beginning before January 1, 1987, or (2) are deferred from taxable years beginning after December 31, 1986, pursuant to an agreement that was in writing on August 16, 1986, and on such date provided for a deferral for each taxable year covered by the agreement of a fixed amount or of an amount determined pursuant to a fixed formula. The provision in (2) ceases to apply if there is any modification to the agreement or formula.

HOUSE BILL

The House bill provides that amounts deferred under a section 457 plan of a State or local government are includible in income when paid.

The House bill also repeals the special minimum distribution rules applicable to section 457 plans. Thus, such plans are subject to the minimum distribution rules applicable to qualified plans.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for distributions after December 31, 2000.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment includes the House bill provisions.

In addition, the Senate amendment modifies the transition rule adopted in the 1986 Act relating to deferred compensation plans of tax-exempt employers. Under the bill, the transition rule applies to agreements providing cost-of-living adjustments to amounts that otherwise satisfy the requirements of the transition rule. The grandfather does not apply to the extent that the annual amount provided under such an agreement exceeds the annual grandfathered amount multiplied by the cumulative increase in the Consumer Price Index (as published by the Department of Labor).

Effective date.—The provision is generally effective for distributions after December 31, 2000. The provision relating to plans of tax-exempt organizations is effective for taxable years ending after the date of enactment for cost-of-living increases after September 1993.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House bill.

Subtitle E. Strengthening Pension Security and Enforcement (secs. 441–448 of the bill)

A. PHASE IN REPEAL OF 155 PERCENT OF CURRENT LIABILITY FUNDING LIMIT; DEDUCTION FOR CONTRIBUTIONS TO FUND TERMINATION LIABILITY (SECS. 501 AND 502 OF THE HOUSE BILL, SECS. 501 AND 502 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT, AND SECS. 404(A)(1), 412(C)(7), AND 4972(C) OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

Under present law, defined benefit pension plans are subject to minimum funding requirements designed to ensure that pension plans have sufficient assets to pay benefits. A defined benefit pension plan is funded using one of a number of acceptable actuarial cost methods.

No contribution is required under the minimum funding rules in excess of the full funding limit. The full funding limit is generally defined as the excess, if any, of (1) the lesser of (a) the accrued liability under the plan (including normal cost) or (b) 155 percent of the plan's current liability, over (2) the value of the plan's assets (sec. 412(c)(7)).[45] In general, current liability is all liabilities to plan participants and beneficiaries accrued to date, whereas the accrued liability full funding limit is based on projected benefits. The current liability full funding limit is scheduled to increase as follows: 160 percent for plan years beginning in 2001 or 2002, 165 percent for plan years beginning in 2003 and 2004, and 170 percent for plan years beginning in 2005 and thereafter.[46] In no event is a plan's full funding limit less than 90 percent of the plan's current liability over the value of the plan's assets.

An employer sponsoring a defined benefit pension plan generally may deduct amounts contributed to satisfy the minimum funding standard for the plan year. Contributions in excess of the full funding limit generally are not deductible. Under a special rule, an employer that sponsors a defined benefit pension plan (other than a multiemployer plan) which has more than 100 participants for the plan year may deduct amounts contributed of up to 100 percent of the plan's unfunded current liability.

HOUSE BILL

Current liability full funding limit

The bill gradually increases and then repeals the current liability full funding limit. The current liability full funding limit is 160 percent of current liability for plan years beginning in 2001, 165 percent for plan years beginning in 2002, and 170 percent for plan years beginning in 2003. The current liability full funding limit is repealed for plan years beginning in 2004 and thereafter. Thus, in 2004 and thereafter, the full funding limit will be the excess, if any, of (1) the accrued liability under the plan (including normal cost), over (2) the value of the plan's assets.

Deduction for contributions to fund termination liability

The special rule allowing a deduction for unfunded current liability generally is extended to all defined benefit pension plans, i.e., the provision applies to multiemployer plans and plans with 100 or fewer participants. The special rule does not apply to plans not covered by the PBGC termination insurance program.[47]

The bill also modifies the rule by providing that the deduction is for up to 100 percent of unfunded termination liability, determined as if the plan terminated at the end of the plan year. In the case of a plan with less than 100 participants for the plan year, termination liability does not include the liability attributable to benefit increases for highly compensated employees resulting from a plan amendment which was made or became effective, whichever is later, within the last two years.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for plan years beginning after December 31, 2000.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

B. EXCISE TAX RELIEF FOR SOUND PENSION FUNDING (SEC. 503 OF THE HOUSE BILL, SEC. 503 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT, AND SEC. 4972 OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

Under present law, defined benefit pension plans are subject to minimum funding requirements designed to ensure that pension plans have sufficient assets to pay benefits. A defined benefit pension plan is funded using one of a number of acceptable actuarial cost methods.

No contribution is required under the minimum funding rules in excess of the full funding limit. The full funding limit is generally defined as the excess, if any, of (1) the lesser of (a) the accrued liability under the plan (including normal cost) or (b) 155 percent of the plan's current liability, over (2) the value of the plan's assets (sec. 412(c)(7)). In general, current liability is all liabilities to plan participants and beneficiaries accrued to date, whereas the accrued liability full funding limit is based on projected benefits. The current liability full funding limit is scheduled to increase as follows: 160 percent for plan years beginning in 2001 or 2002, 165 percent for plan years beginning in 2003 and 2004, and 170 percent for plan years beginning in 2005 and thereafter.[48] In no event is a plan's full funding limit less than 90 percent of the plan's current liability over the value of the plan's assets.

[43] Other provisions of the bill expand the kinds of plans to which benefits may be rolled over.

[44] This rule of inclusion does not apply to amounts deferred under a tax-qualified retirement plan or similar plans.

[45] The minimum funding requirements, including the full funding limit, are also contained in title I of ERISA.

[46] As originally enacted in the Pension Protection Act of 1997, the current liability full funding limit was 150 percent of current liability. The Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 increased the current liability full funding limit to 155 percent in 1999 and 2000, and adopted the scheduled increases described in the text.

[47] The PBGC termination insurance program does not cover plans of professional service employers that have fewer than 25 participants.

An employer sponsoring a defined benefit pension plan generally may deduct amounts contributed to satisfy the minimum funding standard for the plan year. Contributions in excess of the full funding limit generally are not deductible. Under a special rule, an employer that sponsors a defined benefit pension plan (other than a multiemployer plan) which has more than 100 participants for the plan year may deduct amounts contributed of up to 100 percent of the plan's unfunded current liability.

Present law also provides that contributions to defined contribution plans are deductible, subject to certain limitations.

Subject to certain exceptions, an employer that makes nondeductible contributions to a plan is subject to an excise tax equal to 10 percent of the amount of the nondeductible contributions for the year. The 10-percent excise tax does not apply to contributions to certain terminating defined benefit plans. The 10-percent excise tax also does not apply to contributions of up to 6 percent of compensation to a defined contribution plan for employer matching and employee elective deferrals.

HOUSE BILL

In determining the amount of nondeductible contributions, the employer is permitted to elect not to take into account contributions to a defined benefit pension plan except to the extent they exceed the accrued liability full funding limit. Thus, if an employer elects, contributions in excess of the current liability full funding limit are not subject to the excise tax on nondeductible contributions. An employer making such an election for a year is not permitted to take advantage of the present-law exceptions for certain terminating plans and certain contributions to defined contribution plans. The provision applies to terminated plans as well as ongoing plans.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for years beginning after December 31, 2000.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

C. NOTICE OF SIGNIFICANT REDUCTION IN PLAN BENEFIT ACCRUALS (SEC. 504 OF THE HOUSE BILL, SECS. 521–523 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT, AND SECS. 411(D) AND 417(E) AND NEW SEC. 4980F OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

Section 204(h) of Title I of ERISA provides that a defined benefit pension plan or a money purchase pension plan may not be amended so as to provide for a significant reduction in the rate of future benefit accrual, unless, after adoption of the plan amendment and not less than 15 days before the effective date of the plan amendment, the plan administrator provides a written notice ("section 204(h) notice"), setting forth the plan amendment (or a summary of the amendment written in a manner calculated to be understood by the average plan participant) and its effective date. The plan administrator must provide the section 204(h) notice to each plan participant, each alternate payee under an applicable qualified domestic relations order ("QDRO"), and each employee organization representing participants in the plan. The applicable Treasury regulations[49] provide, however, that a plan administrator need not provide the section 204(h) notice to any participant or alternate payee whose rate of future benefit accrual is reasonably expected not to be reduced by the amendment, nor to an employee organization that does not represent a participant to whom the section 204(h) notice must be provided. In addition, the regulations provide that the rate of future benefit accrual is determined without regard to optional forms of benefit, early retirement benefits, retirement-type subsidiaries, ancillary benefits, and certain other rights and features.

A covered amendment generally will not become effective with respect to any participants and alternate payees whose rate of future benefit accrual is reasonably expected to be reduced by the amendment but who do not receive a section 204(h) notice. An amendment will become effective with respect to all participants and alternate payees to whom the section 204(h) notice was required to be provided if the plan administrator (1) has made a good faith effort to comply with the section 204(h) notice requirements, (2) has provided a section 204(h) notice to each employee organization that represents any participant to whom a section 204(h) notice was required to be provided, (3) has failed to provide a section 204(h) notice to no more than a de minimis percentage of participants and alternate payees to whom a section 204(h) notice was required to be provided, and (4) promptly upon discovering the oversight, provides a section 204(h) notice to each omitted participant and alternate payee.

The Internal Revenue Code does not require any notice concerning a plan amendment that provides for a significant reduction in the rate of future benefit accrual.

The Internal Revenue Code prohibits the reduction of a participant's accrued benefit by plan amendment (sec. 411(d)(6)), and, for this purpose, except to the extent set forth in Treasury regulations, treats the elimination or reduction of an early retirement benefit or retirement-type subsidy or an optional form of benefit as a reduction of a participant's accrued benefit. However, this prohibition does not prevent a plan amendment from ceasing or reducing future accruals.

In the case of a pension plan that is subject to the joint and survivor annuity rules, the Internal Revenue Code (sec. 417(e)) restricts distributions before normal retirement age without the consent of the participant and the participant's spouse unless the value of the distribution does not exceed a dollar limit ($5,000 under sec. 411(a)(11)(A)). For this purpose, under Treasury regulations, a specific interest rate and mortality table are prescribed for purposes of determining whether the distribution exceeds the dollar limit and prohibits a lump sum distribution of an amount less than the amount determined under the applicable interest rate and mortality table even if the distribution exceeds the dollar limit.

HOUSE BILL

The provision adds to the Internal Revenue Code a requirement that the plan administrator of a defined benefit pension plan or a money purchase pension plan with more than 100 participants furnish a written notice concerning a plan amendment that provides for a significant reduction in the rate of future benefit accrual. The plan administrator is required to provide in this notice, in a manner calculated to be understood by the average plan participant, sufficient information (as defined in Treasury regulations) to allow participants to understand the effect of the amendment.

The notice requirement does not apply to governmental plans or church plans with respect to which an election to have the qualified plan participation, vesting, and funding rules apply has not been made (sec. 410(d)).

The plan administrator is required to provide this notice to each affected participant, each affected alternate payee, and each employee organization representing affected participants. For purposes of the provision, an affected participant or alternate payee is a participant or alternate payee to whom the significant reduction in the rate of future benefit accrual is reasonably expected to apply.

Except to the extent provided by Treasury regulations, the plan administrator is required to provide the notice within a reasonable time before the effective date of the plan amendment.

The provision imposes on a plan administrator that fails to comply with the notice requirement an excise tax equal to $100 per day per omitted participant and alternate payee. For failures due to reasonable cause and not to willful neglect, the total excise tax imposed during a taxable year of the employer will not exceed $500,000. Furthermore, in the case of a failure due to reasonable cause and not to willful neglect, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to waive the excise tax to the extent that the payment of the tax would be excessive relative to the failure involved.

It is intended that the Secretary will issue the necessary regulations with respect to disclosure within 90 days of enactment. It is also intended that such guidance may be relatively detailed because of the need to provide for alternative disclosures rather than a single disclosure methodology that may not fit all situations, and the need to consider the complex actuarial calculations and assumptions involved in providing necessary disclosures.

In addition, the provision directs the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare a report on the effects of conversions of traditional defined benefit plans to cash balance or hybrid formula plans. Such study is to examine the effect of such conversions on longer service participants, including the incidence and effects of "wear away" provisions under which participants earn no additional benefits for a period of time after the conversion. The Secretary is directed to submit such report, together with recommendations thereon, to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate as soon as practicable, but not later than 60 days after the date of enactment.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for plan amendments taking effect on or after the date of enactment. The period for providing any notice required under the provision will not end before the last day of the 3-month period following the date of enactment. Prior to the issuance of Treasury regulations, a plan will be treated as meeting the requirements of the provision if the plan makes a good faith effort to comply with such requirements.

[48] As originally enacted in the Pension Protection Act of 1997, the current liability full funding limit was 150 percent of current liability. The Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 increased the current liability full funding limit to 155 percent in 1999 and 2000, and adopted the scheduled increases described in the text. Another proposal would gradually increase and then repeal the current liability full funding limit.

[49] Treas. Reg. sec. 1.411(d)-6.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The provision adds to the Internal Revenue Code a requirement that the plan administrator of a pension plan furnish a written notice concerning a plan amendment that provides for a significant reduction in the rate of future benefit accrual, including any elimination or reduction of an early retirement benefit or retirement-type subsidy.[50] The notice is required to set forth: (1) a summary of the amendment and the effective date of the amendment; (2) a statement that the amendment is expected to significantly reduce the rate of future benefit accrual; (3) a description of the classes of employees reasonably expected to be affected by the reduction in the rate of future benefit accrual; (4) examples illustrating the plan changes for these classes of employees; (5) in the event of an amendment that results in a conversion of a traditional defined benefit plan to a cash balance plan (described below), a notice that the plan administrator will provide, generally no later than 15 days prior to the effective date of the amendment, a "benefit estimation tool kit" (described below) that will enable affected participants who have completed at least 1 year of participation to personalize the illustrative examples; and (6) notice of each affected participant's right to request, and of the procedures for requesting, an annual benefit statement as provided under present law. The plan administrator is required to provide the notice not less than 45 days before the effective date of the plan amendment.

The notice requirement does not apply to plans to which ERISA sec. 204(h) does not apply, including governmental plans or church plans with respect to which an election to have the qualified plan participation, vesting, and funding rules apply has not been made (sec. 410(d)).

The plan administrator is required to provide this generalized notice to each affected participant and each affected alternate payee. For purposes of the provision, an affected participant or alternate payee is a participant or alternate payee to whom the reduction in the rate of future benefit accrual, including any elimination or significant reduction in early retirement benefit or retirement-type subsidy, is reasonably expected to apply.

As noted above, the provision requires the plan administrator to provide a benefit estimation tool kit, no later than 15 days prior to the amendment effective date, to a participant for whom the amendment may reasonably be expected to produce a significant reduction in the rate of future benefit accrual if the amendment has the effect of converting a traditional defined benefit plan to a cash balance plan. The plan administrator is not required to provide this benefit estimation tool kit to any participant who has less than 1 year of participation in the plan. For purposes of the provision, a "cash balance plan" means a defined benefit plan under which the accrued benefit is determined as an amount other than an annual benefit commencing at normal retirement age, and any defined benefit plan, or portion of such a plan, that has an effect similar to a defined benefit plan under which the accrued benefit is determined as an amount other than an annual benefit commencing at normal retirement age (as determined under Treasury regulations). If the benefits of 2 or more defined benefit plans established or maintained by an employer are coordinated in such a manner as to have the effect of a conversion to a cash balance plan, the provision treats the sponsor of the plan or plans providing for such coordination as having adopted such a conversion as of the date such coordination begins. If a plan sponsor represents in communications to participants and beneficiaries that a plan amendment has an effect equivalent to a cash balance conversion, such amendment is (to the extent provided in Treasury regulations) treated as a cash balance conversion. In addition, the provision provides for the Secretary of the Treasury to issue regulations to prevent avoidance of the requirements of the provision through the use of 2 or more plan amendments rather than a single amendment.

The benefit estimation tool kit is designed to enable participants to estimate benefits under the old and new plan provisions. The provision permits the tool kit to be in the form of software (for use at home, at a workplace kiosk, or on a company intranet), worksheets, or calculation instructions, or other formats to be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury. The tool kit is required to include any necessary actuarial assumptions and formulas and to permit the participant to estimate both a single life annuity at appropriate ages and, when available, a lump sum distribution. The tool kit is required to disclose the interest rate used to compute a lump sum distribution and whether the value of early retirement benefits is included in the lump sum distribution.

The provision requires the benefit estimation tool kit to accommodate employee-provided variables with respect to age, years of service, retirement age, covered compensation, and interest rate (when variable rates apply). The tool kit is required to permit employees to recalculate estimated benefits by changing the values of these variables. The provision does not require the tool kit to accommodate employee variables with respect to qualified domestic relations orders, factors that result in unusual patterns of credited service (such as extended time away from the job), special benefit formulas for unusual situations, offsets from other plans, and forms of annuity distributions.

In the case of a cash balance conversion that occurs in connection with a business disposition or acquisition transaction and within 1 year following the date of the transaction, the provision requires the plan administrator to provide the benefit estimation tool kit prior to the end of the 2-year period following the date of the transaction to the affected participants who become participants as a result of the transaction.

The provision permits a plan administrator to provide any notice required under the provision to a person designated in writing by the individual to whom it would otherwise be provided. In addition, the provision authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to allow any notice required under the provision to be provided by using new technologies.

The provision imposes on a plan administrator that fails to comply with the notice requirement an excise tax equal to $100 per day per omitted participant and alternate payee. No excise tax shall be imposed during any period during which any person subject to liability for the tax did not know that the failure existed and exercised reasonable diligence to meet the notice requirement. Also, no excise tax shall be imposed on any failure if any person subject to liability for the tax exercised reasonable diligence to meet the notice requirement and such person provides the required notice during the 30-day period beginning on the first date such person knew, or exercising reasonable diligence would have known, that the failure existed. If the person subject to liability for the excise tax exercised reasonable diligence to meet the notice requirement, the total excise tax imposed during a taxable year of the employer will not exceed $500,000. Furthermore, in the case of a failure due to reasonable cause and not to willful neglect, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to waive the excise tax to the extent that the payment of the tax is excessive or otherwise inequitable relative to the failure involved.

The provision adds to the Internal Revenue Code and ERISA requirements designed to prevent the use of "wear away" provisions under which participants earn no additional benefits for a period of time after a conversion of a traditional defined benefit plan to a cash balance plan. These requirements are in addition to the other provisions of the Internal Revenue Code that prohibit the reduction of a participant's accrued benefit by plan amendment (sec. 411(d)(6)). In the event of a conversion of a traditional defined benefit plan to a cash balance plan, the provision applies a minimum benefit requirement. This minimum benefit requirement requires a participant's accrued benefit under the cash balance plan to equal not less than (1) the benefit accrued for years of service prior to the conversion under the traditional defined benefit plan formula (not taking into account any early retirement benefit or retirement-type subsidy), plus (2) any benefit accrued for years of service after the conversion under the cash balance plan benefit formula. If the amendment provides that the accrued benefit initially credited to a participant's accumulation account (or its equivalent) on the effective date of the amendment satisfies the present value rules described below, the plan will not be treated as failing to provide to the participant an accrued benefit that includes such pre-conversion accrued benefit at any time after the effective date of the amendment merely because of a fluctuation in interest rates. The provision does not apply the minimum benefit requirement designed to prevent "wear away" to a cash balance conversion amendment to the extent that the amendment permits a participant to continue to accrue benefits in the same manner as under the terms of the plan in effect prior to the amendment (for example, by providing for the participant to receive the greater of the old or new formulas).

Under the provision, a plan is treated as satisfying the minimum benefit requirement designed to prevent "wear away" if a plan amendment provides that the present value of a participant's benefit accrued under a traditional defined benefit plan formula prior to a cash balance conversion is not less than the greater of (1) the present value determined using the applicable mortality table and the applicable interest rate in effect under the plan on the effective date of the cash balance conversion, or (2) the amount of the lump sum distribution that would be payable as of such effective date if the participant were eligible to receive a distribution under the terms of the plan as in effect immediately before such effective date, but not taking into account any early retirement benefit or retirement-type subsidy.

[50] The provision also modifies the present-law notice requirement contained in section 204(h) of Title I of ERISA to provide that an applicable pension plan may not be amended to provide for a significant reduction in the rate of future benefit accrual in the event of an egregious failure by the plan administrator to comply with a notice requirement similar to the notice requirement that the provision adds to the Internal Revenue Code. In addition, the provision expands the current ERISA notice requirement regarding significant reductions in normal retirement benefit accrual rates to early retirement benefits and retirement-type subsidies.

Except as provided in regulations, the provision generally requires the present value of the accrued benefit of any participant under a cash balance plan to be equal to the balance in the participant's accumulation account (or its equivalent) as of the time of the present value determination. This requirement will not apply to any portion of the participant's benefit accrued prior to a cash balance conversion except to the extent the plan provides that the amount initially credited to a participant's accumulation account (or its equivalent) on the effective date of the conversion is not less than the benefit accrued for years of service prior to the conversion under the traditional defined benefit formula (not taking into account any early retirement benefit or retirement-type subsidy). This provision is solely intended to permit plan sponsors to provide interest credits in an amount greater than the amount currently permitted under the Internal Revenue Code. Regulations may condition satisfaction of this requirement on the plan crediting interest at rates not in excess of a maximum and not less than a minimum specified in the regulations.

Failure to comply with the requirements of the provision designed to prevent "wear away" results in the disqualification of the plan.

The provision directs the Secretary of the Treasury to define in regulations, within 12 months after the date of enactment, the terms "early retirement benefit" and "retirement-type subsidy." In addition, with respect to a participant who is eligible to accrue benefits under the terms of a defined benefit plan as in effect either before or after an amendment that results in a conversion to a cash balance plan, the provision directs the Secretary of the Treasury to prescribe regulations under which (1) the plan will be treated as meeting the requirements of sec. 411(b)(1)(A), (B), or (C) if such requirements are met separately with respect to each of the plan's methods of accruing benefits, and (2) the plan will not be treated as failing to meet the requirements of sec. 401(a)(4) merely because only participants as of the effective date of the amendment are so eligible, if the plan met the requirements of sec. 401(a)(4) under the terms of the plan as in effect before the amendment (subject to the terms and conditions provided by the regulations).

Under the provision, no inference is intended with respect to the proper treatment of cash balance plans or conversions to cash balance plans under the laws in effect prior to the effective date of the provision or under laws not affected by the provision. In addition, the provision is not intended to result in the treatment of a cash balance plan as a defined contribution plan, or to affect the rules relating to involuntary cash outs (sec. 411(a)(11))[51] or survivor annuity requirements (sec. 417).

Effective date.—The provision is effective for plan amendments taking effect on or after the date of enactment, with a delayed effective date for plans maintained pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement. The period for providing any notice required under the provision will not end before the last day of the 3-month period following the date of enactment. The notice requirements under the provision do not apply to any plan amendment taking effect on or after the date or enactment if, before September 5, 2000, notice is provided to participants and beneficiaries adversely affected by the plan amendment (or their representatives) that is reasonably expected to notify them of the nature and effective date of the plan amendment.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House bill, with the following modifications.[52] The conference agreement also requires a notice with respect to the elimination or reduction of an early retirement benefit or retirement-type subsidy. In addition, the conference agreement authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to provide a simplified notice requirement or an exemption from the notice requirement for plans with less than 100 participants and to allow any notice required under the conference agreement to be provided by using new technologies. The conference agreement also authorizes the Secretary to provide a simplified notice requirement or an exemption from the notice requirement if participants are given the option to choose between benefits under the new plan formula and the old plan formula. In such cases, the conferees understand that the fiduciary rules applicable to pension plans may require appropriate disclosure to participants, even if no disclosure is required under the provision. With respect to the amount of the excise tax for failure to comply with the notice requirement, the conference agreement provides that no excise tax shall be imposed during any period during which any person subject to liability for the tax did not know that the failure existed and exercised reasonable diligence to meet the notice requirement. The conference agreement also provides that no excise tax shall be imposed on any failure if any person subject to liability for the tax exercised reasonable diligence to meet the notice requirement and such person provides the required notice during the 30-day period beginning on the first date such person knew, or exercising reasonable diligence would have known, that the failure existed. Furthermore, the conference agreement provides that if the person subject to liability for the excise tax exercised reasonable diligence to meet the notice requirement, the total excise tax imposed during a taxable year will not exceed $500,000.

Effective date.—The conference agreement is effective for plan amendments taking effect on or after the date of enactment. The period for providing any notice required under the conference agreement will not end before the last day of the 3-month period following the date of enactment. Prior to the issuance of Treasury regulations, a plan will be treated as meeting the requirements of the conference agreement if the plan makes a good faith effort to comply with such requirements. The notice requirement under the conference agreement does not apply to any plan amendment taking effect on or after the date or enactment if, before October 24, 2000, notice is provided to participants and beneficiaries adversely affected by the plan amendment (or their representatives) that is reasonably expected to notify them of the nature and effective date of the plan amendment.

D. Modifications to Section 415 Limits for Multiemployer Plans (sec. 505 of the House bill, sec. 504 of the Senate amendment, and sec. 415 of the Code)

PRESENT LAW

Under present law, limits apply to contributions and benefits under qualified plans (sec. 415). The limits on contributions and benefits under qualified plans are based on the type of plan.

Under a defined benefit plan, the maximum annual benefit payable at retirement is generally the lesser of (1) 100 percent of average compensation for the highest three years, or (2) $135,000 (for 2000). The dollar limit is adjusted for cost-of-living increases in $5,000 increments. The dollar limit is reduced in the case of retirement before the social security retirement age and increased in the case of retirement after the social security retirement age.

A special rule applies to governmental defined benefit plans. In the case of such plans, the defined benefit dollar limit is reduced in the case of retirement before age 62 and increased in the case of retirement after age 65. In addition, there is a floor on early retirement benefits. Pursuant to this floor, the minimum benefit payable at age 55 is $75,000.

In the case of a defined contribution plan, the limit on annual is additions if the lesser of (1) 25 percent of compensation[53] or (2) $30,000 (for 2000).

In applying these limits, plans of the same employer are aggregated. That is, all defined benefit plans of the same employer are treated as a single plan, and all defined contribution plans of the same employer are treated as a single plan. Under Treasury regulations, multiemployer plans are not aggregated with other multiemployer plans. However, if an employer maintains both a plan that is not a multiemployer plan and a mulitemployer plan, the plan that is not a multiemployer plan is aggregated with the multiemployer plan to the extent that benefits provided under the multiemployer plan are provided with respect to a common participant.[54]

HOUSE BILL

Under the House bill, the 100 percent of compensation defined benefit plan limit does not apply to multiemployer plans. In addition, multiemployer plans are not aggregated with any other plan maintained by the same employer, except for purposes of applying the dollar limitation on defined plans and the limits on annual additions to a plan that is not a multiemployer plan.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for years beginning after December 31, 2000.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill with respect to waiver of the 100 percent of compensation limit.

With respect to aggregation of multiemployer plans with other plans, the Senate amendment provides that multiemployer plans are not aggregated with single-employer defined benefit plans maintained by an employer contributing to the multiemployer plan for purposes of applying the 100 percent of compensation limit to such single-employer plan.

[51] Another provision provides that rollover amounts are not taken into account for purposes of the cash-out rules.

[52] The conference agreement also modifies the present-law notice requirement contained in section 204(h) of Title I of ERISA to provide that an applicable pension plan may not be amended to provide for a significant reduction in the rate of future benefit accrual in the event of a failure by the plan administrator to comply with a notice requirement similar to the notice requirement that the conference agreement adds to the Internal Revenue Code. In addition, the conference agreement expands the current ERISA notice requirement regarding significant reductions in normal retirement benefit accrual rates to reductions in early retirement benefits and retirement-type subsidies.

[53] Another provision of the bill increases this limit to 100 percent of compensation.

[54] Treas. reg. sec. 1.415-8(e).

Effective date.—Same as the House bill.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment with respect to the 100-percent of compensation limitation. Thus, the 100-percent of compensation defined benefit plan limit does not apply to multiemployer plans.

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment with respect to the aggregation of multiemployer plans with other plans, with modifications.

E. INVESTMENT OF EMPLOYEE CONTRIBUTIONS IN 401(K) PLANS (SEC. 505 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT AND SEC. 1524(B) OF THE TAXPAYER RELIEF ACT OF 1997)

PRESENT LAW

The Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, as amended ("ERISA") prohibits certain employee benefit plans from acquiring securities or real property of the employer who sponsors the plan if, after the acquisition, the fair market value of such securities and property exceeds 10 percent of the fair market value of plan assets. The 10-percent limitation does not apply to any "eligible individual account plans" that specifically authorize such investments. Generally, eligible individual account plans are defined contribution plans, including plans containing a cash or deferred arrangement ("401(k) plans").

The term "eligible individual account plan" does not include the portion of a plan that consists of elective deferrals (and earnings on the elective deferrals) made under section 401(k) if elective deferrals equal to more than 1 percent of any employee's eligible compensation are required to be invested in employer securities and employer real property. Eligible compensation is compensation that is eligible to be deferred under the plan. The portion of the plan that consists of elective deferrals (and earnings thereon) is still treated as an individual account plan, and the 10-percent limitation does not apply, as long as elective deferrals (and earnings thereon) are not required to be invested in employer securities or employer real property.

The rule excluding elective deferrals (and earnings thereon) from the definition of individual account plan does not apply if individual account plans are a small part of the employer's retirement plans. In particular, that rule does not apply to an individual account plan for a plan year if the value of the assets of all individual account plans maintained by the employer do not exceed 10 percent of the value of the assets of all pension plans maintained by the employer (determined as of the last day of the preceding plan year). Multiemployer plans are not taken into account in determining whether the value of the assets of all individual account plans maintained by the employer exceed 10 percent of the value of the assets of all pension plans maintained by the employer. The rule excluding elective deferrals (and earnings thereon) from the definition of individual account plan does not apply to an employee stock ownership plan as defined in section 4975(e)(7) of the Internal Revenue Code.

The rule excluding elective deferrals (and earnings thereon) from the definition of individual account plan applies to elective deferrals for plan years beginning after December 31, 1998 (and earnings thereon). It does not apply with respect to earnings on elective deferrals for plan years beginning before January 1, 1999.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The provision modifies the effective date of the rule excluding certain elective deferrals (and earnings thereon) from the definition of individual account plan by providing that the rule does not apply to any elective deferral used to acquire employer securities or employer real property acquired before January 1, 1999.

Effective date.—The provision is effective as if included in the section of the Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 that contained the rule excluding certain elective deferrals (and earnings thereon) from the definition of individual account plan.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

F. PERIODIC PENSION BENEFIT STATEMENTS (SEC. 506 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT AND SEC. 105(A) OF ERISA)

PRESENT LAW

Title I of ERISA provides that a pension plan administrator must furnish a benefit statement to any participant or beneficiary who makes a written request for such a statement. This statement must indicate, on the basis of the latest available information, (1) the participant's or beneficiary's total accrued benefit, and (2) the participant's or beneficiary's vested accrued benefit or the earliest date on which the accrued benefit will become vested. A participant or beneficiary is not entitled to receive more than 1 benefit statement during any 12-month period. The plan administrator must furnish the benefit statement no later than 60 days after receipt of the request or, if later, 120 days after the close of the immediately preceding plan year.

In addition, the plan administrator must furnish a benefit statement to each participant whose employment terminates or who has a 1-year break in service. For purposes of this benefit statement requirement, a "1-year break in service" is a calendar year, plan year, or other 12-month period designated by the plan during which the participant does not complete more than 500 hours of service for the employer. A participant is not entitled to receive more than 1 benefit statement with respect to consecutive breaks in service. The plan administrator must provide a benefit statement required upon termination of employment or a break in service no later than 180 days after the end of the plan year in which the termination of employment or break in service occurs.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

A plan administrator of a defined contribution plan generally is required to furnish a benefit statement to each participant at least once annually and to a beneficiary upon written request.

In addition to providing a benefit statement to a participant or beneficiary upon written request, the plan administrator of a defined benefit plan generally is required either (1) to furnish a benefit statement at least once every 3 years to each participant who has a vested accrued benefit and who is employed by the employer at the time the plan administrator furnishes the benefit statements to participants, or (2) to annually furnish written, electronic, telephonic, or other appropriate notice to each participant of the availability of and the manner in which the participant may obtain the benefit statement.

The plan administrator of a multiemployer plan or a multiple employer plan is required to furnish a benefit statement only upon written request of a participant or beneficiary.[55]

The plan administrator is required to write the benefit statement in a manner calculated to be understood by the average plan participant and is permitted to furnish the statement in written, electronic, telephonic, or other appropriate form.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for plan years beginning after December 31, 2000.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with the following modifications. The conference agreement authorizes the Secretary of Labor to provide that years in which no employee or former employee benefits under a plan need not be taken into account in determining the applicable 3-year period.

Effective date.—The conference agreement is effective for plan years beginning after December 31, 2001.

G. PROHIBITED ALLOCATIONS OF STOCK IN AN S CORPORATION ESOP (SEC. 506 OF THE HOUSE BILL, SEC. 507 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT, AND SECS. 409 AND 4979A OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

The Small Business Job Protection Act of 1996 allowed qualified retirement plan trusts described in section 401(a) to own stock in an S corporation. That Act treated the plan's share of the S corporation's income (and gain on the disposition of the stock) as includible in full in the trust's unrelated business taxable income ("UBTI").

The Tax Relief Act of 1997 repealed the provision treating items of income or loss of an S corporation as UBTI in the case of an employee stock ownership plan ("ESOP"). Thus, the income of an S corporation allocable to an ESOP is not subject to current taxation.

Present law provides a deferral of income on the sales of certain employer securities to an ESOP (sec. 1042). A 50-percent excise tax is imposed on certain prohibited allocations of securities acquired by an ESOP in a transaction to which section 1042 applies. In addition, such allocations are currently includible in the gross income of the individual receiving the prohibited allocation.

HOUSE BILL

In general

Under the provision, if there is a nonallocation year with respect to an ESOP maintained by an S corporation: (1) the amount allocated in a prohibited allocation to an individual who is a disqualified person is treated as distributed to such individual (i.e., the value of the prohibited allocation is includible in the gross income of the individual receiving the prohibited allocation); (2) an excise tax is imposed on the S corporation equal to 50 percent of the amount involved in a prohibited allocation; and (3) an excise tax is imposed on the S corporation with respect to any synthetic equity owned by a disqualified person.[56]

[55] A multiple employer plan is a plan that is maintained by 2 or more unrelated employers but that is not maintained pursuant to a collective-bargaining agreement (sec. 413(c)).

[56] The plan is not disqualified merely because an excise tax is imposed under the provision.

It is intended that the provision will limit the establishment of ESOPs by S corporations to those that provide broad-based employee coverage and that benefit rank-and-file employees as well as highly compensated employees and historical owners.

Definition of nonallocation year

A nonallocation year means any plan year of an ESOP holding shares in an S corporation if, at any time during the plan year, disqualified persons own at least 50 percent of the number of outstanding shares of the S corporation.

A person is a disqualified person if the person is either (1) a member of a "deemed 20-percent shareholder group" or (2) a "deemed 10-percent shareholder." A person is a member of a "deemed 20-percent shareholder group" if the aggregate number of deemed-owned shares of the person and his or her family members is at least 20 percent of the number of deemed-owned shares of stock in the S corporation.[57] A person is a deemed 10-percent shareholder if the person is not a member of a deemed 20-percent shareholder group and the number of the person's deemed-owned shares is at least 10 percent of the number of deemed-owned shares of stock of the corporation.

In general, "deemed-owned shares" means: (1) stock allocated to the account of an individual under the ESOP, and (2) an individual's share of unallocated stock held by the ESOP. An individual's share of unallocated stock held by an ESOP is determined in the same manner as the most recent allocation of stock under the terms of the plan.

For purposes of determining whether there is a nonallocation year, ownership of stock generally is attributed under the rules of section 318,[58] except that: (1) the family attribution rules are modified to include certain other family members, as described below, (2) option attribution does not apply (but instead special rules relating to synthetic equity described below apply), and (3) "deemed-owned shares" held by the ESOP are treated as held by the individual with respect to whom they are deemed owned.

Under the provision, family members of an individual include (1) the spouse[59] of the individual, (2) an ancestor or lineal descendant of the individual or his or her spouse, (3) a sibling of the individual (or the individual's spouse) and any lineal descendant of the brother or sister, and (4) the spouse of any person described in (2) or (3).

The provision contains special rules applicable to synthetic equity interests. Except to the extent provided in regulations, the stock on which a synthetic equity interest is based is treated as outstanding stock of the S corporation and as deemed-owned shares of the person holding the synthetic equity interest if such treatment would result in the treatment of any person as a disqualified person or the treatment of any year as a nonallocation year. Thus, for example, disqualified persons for a year include those individuals who are disqualified persons under the general rule (i.e., treating only those shares held by the ESOP as deemed-owned shares) and those individuals who are disqualified individuals if synthetic equity interests are treated as deemed-owned shares.

"Synthetic equity" means any stock option, warrant, restricted stock, deferred issuance stock right, or similar interest that gives the holder the right to acquire or receive stock of the S corporation in the future. Except to the extent provided in regulations, synthetic equity also includes a stock appreciation right, phantom stock unit, or similar right to a future cash payment based on the value of such stock or appreciation in such value.[60]

Ownership of synthetic equity is attributed in the same manner as stock is attributed under the provision (as described above). In addition, ownership of synthetic equity is attributed under the rules of section 318(a)(2) and (3) in the same manner as stock.

Definition of prohibited allocation

An ESOP of an S corporation is required to provide that no portion of the assets of the plan attributable to (or allocable in lieu of) S corporation stock may, during a nonallocation year, accrue (or be allocated directly or indirectly under any qualified plan of the S corporation) for the benefit of a disqualified person. A "prohibited allocation" refers to violations of this provision. A prohibited allocation occurs, for example, if income on S corporation stock held by an ESOP is allocated to the account of an individual who is a disqualified person.

Application of excise tax

In the case of a prohibited allocation, the S corporation is liable for an excise tax equal to 50 percent of the amount of the allocation. For example, if S corporation stock is allocated in a prohibited allocation, the excise tax is equal to 50 percent of the fair market value of such stock.

A special rule applies in the case of the first nonallocation year, regardless of whether there is a prohibited allocation. In that year, the excise tax also applies to the fair market value of the deemed-owned shares of any disqualified person held by the ESOP, even though those shares are not allocated to the disqualified person in that year.

As mentioned above, the S corporation also is liable for an excise tax with respect to any synthetic equity interest owned by any disqualified person in a nonallocation year. The excise tax is 50 percent of the value of the shares on which synthetic equity is based.

Treasury regulations

The Treasury Department is given the authority to prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of the provision.

Effective date

The provision generally is effective with respect to plan years beginning after December 31, 2001. In the case of an ESOP established after July 11, 2000, or an ESOP established on or before such date if the employer maintaining the plan was not an S corporation on such date, the proposal is effective with respect to plan years ending after July 11, 2000.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

Subtitle F. Reducing Regulatory Burdens
(secs. 451-464 of the bill)

A. MODIFICATION OF TIMING OF PLAN VALUATIONS (SEC. 601 OF THE HOUSE BILL, SEC. 601 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT, AND SEC. 412 OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

Under present law, plan valuations are generally required annually for plans subject to the minimum funding rules. Under proposed Treasury regulations, except as provided by the Commissioner, the valuation must be as of a date within the plan year to which the valuation refers or within the month prior to the beginning of that year.[61]

HOUSE BILL

The provision incorporates into the statute the proposed regulation regarding the date of valuations. The provision also provides, as an exception to this general rule, that the valuation date with respect to a plan year may be any date within the immediately preceding plan year if, as of such date, plan assets are not less than 125 percent of the plan's current liability. Information determined as of such date is required to be adjusted actuarially, in accordance with Treasury regulations, to reflect significant differences in plan participants. An election to use a prior plan year valuation date, once made, may only be revoked with the consent of the Secretary.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for plan years beginning after December 31, 2000.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.[62]

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.[63]

B. ESOP DIVIDENDS MAY BE REINVESTED WITHOUT LOSS OF DIVIDEND DEDUCTION (SEC. 602 OF THE HOUSE BILL, SEC. 602 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT, AND SEC. 404 OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

An employer is entitled to deduct certain dividends paid in cash during the employer's taxable year with respect to stock of the employer that is held by an employee stock ownership plan ("ESOP"). The deduction is allowed with respect to dividends that, in accordance with plan provisions, are (1) paid in cash directly to the plan participants or their beneficiaries, (2) paid to the plan and subsequently distributed to the participants or beneficiaries in cash no later than 90 days after the close of the plan year in which the dividends are paid to the plan, or (3) used to make payments on loans (including payments of interest as well as principal) that were used to acquire the employer securities (whether or not allocated to participants) with respect to which the dividend is paid.

The Secretary may disallow the deduction for any ESOP dividend if he determines that the dividend constitutes, in substance, an evasion of taxation (sec. 404(k)(5)).

HOUSE BILL

In addition to the deductions permitted under present law for dividends paid with respect to employer securities that are held by an ESOP, an employer is entitled to deduct dividends that, at the election of plan participants or their beneficiaries, are (1) payable in cash directly to plan participants or beneficiaries, (2) paid to the plan and subsequently distributed to the participants or beneficiaries in cash no later than 90 days after the close of the plan year in which the dividends are paid to the plan, or (3) paid to the plan and reinvested in qualifying employer securities.

[57] A family member of a member of a "deemed 20-percent shareholder group" with deemed owned shares also is treated as a disqualified person.

[58] These attribution rules also apply to stock treated as owned by reason of the ownership of synthetic equity.

[59] As under section 318, an individual's spouse is not treated as a member of the individual's family if the spouses are legally separated.

[60] The provisions relating to synthetic equity do not modify the rules relating to S corporations, e.g., the circumstances in which options or similar interests are treated as creating a second class of stock.

[61] Prop. reg. sec. 1.412(c)(9)-1(b)(1).

[62] The Senate amendment also amends the corresponding provisions of ERISA.

[63] The conference agreement also amends the corresponding provisions of ERISA.

As under present law, the Secretary may disallow the deduction for any ESOP dividend if he determines that the dividend constitutes, in substance, an evasion of taxation (sec. 404(k)(5)).

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment, with the following modification. The conference agreement permits the Secretary of the Treasury to disallow the deduction for any ESOP dividend in the case of any dividend that constitutes the avoidance or evasion of taxation. For example, it is intended that the Secretary will disallow the deduction as an avoidance or evasion of taxation in circumstances similar to those that would result in a nonallocation year under the provision of the bill relating to S corporation ESOPs. The dividends deductible under the provision are treated the same as other plan earnings, i.e., they are not subject to the limits on elective deferrals or the special nondiscrimination rules applicable to section 401(k) plans, and are not treated as annual additions for purposes of the section 415 limits on contributions.

C. REPEAL TRANSITION RULE RELATING TO CERTAIN HIGHLY COMPENSATED EMPLOYEES (SEC. 603 OF THE HOUSE BILL, SEC. 603 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT, AND SEC. 1114(C)(4) OF THE TAX REFORM ACT OF 1986)

PRESENT LAW

Under present law, for purposes of the rules relating to qualified plans, a highly compensated employee is generally defined as an employee[64] who (1) was a 5-percent owner of the employer at any time during the year or the preceding year or (2) either (a) had compensation for the preceding year in excess of $85,000 (for 2000) or (b) at the election of the employer, had compensation in excess of $85,000 for the preceding year and was in the top 20 percent of employees by compensation for such year.

Under a rule enacted in the Tax Reform Act of 1986, a special definition of highly compensated employee applies for purposes of the nondiscrimination rules relating to qualified cash or deferred arrangements ("section 401(k) plans") and matching contributions. This special definition applies to an employer incorporated on December 15, 1924, that meets certain specific requirements.

HOUSE BILL

The provision repeals the special definition of highly compensated employee under the Tax Reform Act of 1986. Thus, the present-law definition applies.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for plan years beginning after December 31, 2000.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

D. EMPLOYEES OF TAX-EXEMPT ENTITIES (SEC. 604 OF THE HOUSE BILL AND SEC. 604 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT)

PRESENT LAW

The Tax Reform Act of 1986 provided that nongovernmental tax-exempt employers were not permitted to maintain a qualified cash or deferred arrangement ("section 401(k) plan"). This prohibition was repealed, effective for years beginning after December 31, 1996, by the Small Business Job Protection Act of 1996.

Treasury regulations provide that, in applying the nondiscrimination rules to a section 401(k) plan (or a section 401(m) plan that is provided under the same general arrangement as the section 401(k) plan), the employer may treat as excludable those employees of a tax-exempt entity who could not participate in the arrangement due to the prohibition on maintenance of a section 401(k) plan by such entities. Such employees may be disregarded only if more than 95 percent of the employees who could participate in the section 401(k) plan benefit under the plan for the plan year.[65]

Tax-exempt charitable organizations may maintain a tax-sheltered annuity (a "section 403(b) annuity") that allows employees to make salary reduction contributions.

HOUSE BILL

The Treasury Department is directed to revise its regulations under section 410(b) to provide that employees of a tax-exempt charitable organization who are eligible to make salary reduction contributions under a section 403(b) annuity may be treated as excludable employees for purposes of testing a section 401(k) plan, or a section 401(m) plan that is provided under the same general arrangement as the section 401(k) plan of the employer, if (1) no employee of such tax-exempt entity is eligible to participate in the section 401(k) or 401(m) plan and (2) at least 95 percent of the employees who are not employees of the charitable employer are eligible to participate in such section 401(k) plan or section 401(m) plan.

The revised regulations are to be effective for years beginning after December 31, 1996.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

E. TREATMENT OF EMPLOYER-PROVIDED RETIREMENT ADVICE (SEC. 605 OF THE HOUSE BILL, SEC. 605 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT, AND SEC. 132 OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

Under present law, certain employer-provided fringe benefits are excludable from gross income (sec. 132) and wages for employment tax purposes. These excludable fringe benefits include working condition fringe benefits and de minimis fringes. In general, a working condition fringe benefit is any property or services provided by an employer to an employee to the extent that, if the employee paid for such property or services, such payment would be allowable as a deduction as a business expense. A de minimis fringe benefit is any property or services provided by the employer the value of which, after taking into account the frequency with which similar fringes are provided, is so small as to make accounting for it unreasonable or administratively impracticable.

In addition, if certain requirements are satisfied, up to $5,250 annually of employer-provided educational assistance is excludable from gross income (sec. 127) and wages. This exclusion expires with respect to courses beginning after December 31, 2001.[66] Education not excludable under section 127 may be excludable as a working condition fringe.

There is no specific exclusion under present law for employer-provided retirement planning services. However, such services may be excludable as employer-provided educational assistance or a fringe benefit.

HOUSE BILL

Qualified retirement planning services provided to an employee and his or her spouse by an employer maintaining a qualified plan are excludable from income and wages. Qualified retirement planning services are advice and information regarding retirement planning. The exclusion is not limited to information regarding the qualified plan, and, thus, for example, applies to advice and information regarding retirement income planning for an individual and his or her spouse and how the employer's plan fits into the individual's overall retirement income plan. On the other hand, the exclusion does not apply to services that may be related to retirement planning, such as tax preparation, accounting, legal, or brokerage services.

The exclusion does not apply with respect to highly compensated employees unless the services are available on substantially the same terms to each member of the group of employees normally provided education and information regarding the employer's qualified plan.

Effective date.—The provision is effective with respect to years beginning after December 31, 2000.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment. The conferees intend that the provision will clarify the treatment of retirement advice provided in a nondiscriminatory manner. It is intended that the Secretary, in determining the application of the exclusion to highly compensated employees, may permit employers to take into consideration employee circumstances other than compensation and position in providing advice to classifications of employees. Thus, for example, the Secretary may permit employers to limit certain advice to individuals nearing retirement age under the plan.

F. REPORTING SIMPLIFICATION (SEC. 606 OF THE HOUSE BILL AND SEC. 606 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT)

PRESENT LAW

A plan administrator of a pension, annuity, stock bonus, profit-sharing or other funded plan of deferred compensation generally must file with the Secretary of the Treasury an annual return for each plan year containing certain information with respect to the qualification, financial condition, and operation of the plan. Title I of ERISA also may require the plan administrator to file annual reports concerning the plan with the [64] An employee includes a self-employed individual.

---

[65] Treas. Reg. sec. 1.410(b)-6(g).

[66] The exclusion does not apply with respect to graduate-level courses.

Department of Labor and the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation ("PBGC"). The plan administrator must use the Form 5500 series as the format for the required annual return.[67] The Form 5500 series annual return/report, which consists of a primary form and various schedules, includes the information required to be filed with all three agencies. The plan administrator satisfies the reporting requirement with respect to each agency by filing the Form 5500 series annual return/report with the Department of Labor, which forwards the form to the Internal Revenue Service and the PBGC.

The Form 5500 series consists of 3 different forms: Form 5500, Form 5500–C/R, and Form 5500–EZ. Form 5500 is the most comprehensive of the forms and requires the most detailed financial information. Form 5500–C/R requires less information than Form 5500, and Form 5500–EZ, which consists of only 1 page, is the simplest of the forms.

The size of the plan determines which form a plan administrator must file. If the plan has more than 100 participants at the beginning of the plan year, the plan administrator generally must file Form 5500. If the plan has fewer than 100 participants at the beginning of the plan year, the plan administrator generally may file Form 5500–C/R. A plan administrator generally may file Form 5500–EZ if (1) the only participants in the plan are the sole owner of a business that maintains the plan (and such owner's spouse), or partners in a partnership that maintains the plan (and such partners' spouses), (2) the plan is not aggregated with another plan in order to satisfy the minimum coverage requirements of section 410(b), (3) the employer is not a member of a related group of employers, and (4) the employer does not receive the services of leased employees. If the plan satisfies the eligibility requirements for Form 5500–EZ and the total value of the plan assets as of the end of the plan year and all prior plan years does not exceed $100,000, the plan administrator is not required to file a return.

HOUSE BILL

The Secretary of the Treasury is directed to provide for the filing of a simplified annual return substantially similar to the Form 5500–EZ by a plan that (1) covers less than 25 employees on the first day of the plan year, (2) is not aggregated with another plan in order to satisfy the minimum coverage requirements of section 410(b), (3) is maintained by an employer that is not a member of a related group of employers, and (4) is maintained by an employer that does not receive the services of leased employees.

In addition, the Secretary is directed to modify the annual return filing requirements with respect to plans that satisfy the eligibility requirements for Form 5500–EZ to provide that if the total value of the plan assets of such a plan as of the end of the plan year and all prior plan years does not exceed $250,000, the plan administrator is not required to file a return.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on January 1, 2001.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill, except that the Senate amendment does not include the provision relating to annual returns for plans that cover less than 25 employees.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the Senate bill, with the following modification. The conference agreement directs the Secretary of the Treasury to provide simplified reporting requirements for plan years beginning after December 31, 2001, for certain plans with fewer than 25 employees.

G. IMPROVEMENT TO EMPLOYEE PLANS COMPLIANCE RESOLUTION SYSTEM (SEC. 607 OF THE HOUSE BILL AND SEC. 607 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT)

PRESENT LAW

A retirement plan that is intended to be a tax-qualified plan provides retirement benefits on a tax-favored basis if the plan satisfies all of the requirements of section 401(a). Similarly, an annuity that is intended to be a tax-sheltered annuity provides retirement benefits on a tax-favored basis if the program satisfies all of the requirements of section 403(b). Failure to satisfy all of the applicable requirements of section 401(a) or section 403(b) may disqualify a plan or annuity for the intended tax-favored treatment.

The Internal Revenue Service ("IRS") has established the Employee Plans Compliance Resolution System ("EPCRS"), which is a comprehensive system of correction programs for sponsors of retirement plans and annuities that are intended, but have failed, to satisfy the requirements of section 401(a) and section 403(b), as applicable.[68] EPCRS permits employers to correct compliance failures and continue to provide their employees with retirement benefits on a tax-favored basis.

The IRS has designed EPCRS to (1) encourage operational and formal compliance, (2) promote voluntary and timely correction of compliance failures, (3) provide sanctions for compliance failures identified on audit that are reasonable in light of the nature, extent, and severity of the violation, (4) provide consistent and uniform administration of the correction programs, and (5) permit employers to rely on the availability of EPCRS in taking corrective actions to maintain the tax-favored status of their retirement plans and annuities.

The basic elements of the programs that comprise EPCRS are self-correction, voluntary correction with IRS approval, and correction on audit. The Administrative Policy Regarding Self-Correction ("APRSC") permits a plan sponsor that has established compliance practices to correct certain insignificant failures at any time (including during an audit), and certain significant failures within a 2-year period, without payment of any fee or sanction. The Voluntary Compliance Resolution ("VCR") program, the Walk-In Closing Agreement Program ("Walk-In CAP"), and the Tax-Sheltered Annuity Voluntary Correction ("TVC") program permit an employer, at any time before an audit, to pay a limited fee and receive IRS approval of a correction. For a failure that is discovered on audit and corrected, the Audit Closing Agreement Program ("Audit CAP") provides for a sanction that bears a reasonable relationship to the nature, extent, and severity of the failure and that takes into account the extent to which correction occurred before audit.

The IRS has expressed its intent that EPCRS will be updated and improved periodically in light of experience and comments from those who use it.

HOUSE BILL

The Secretary of the Treasury is directed to continue to update and improve EPCRS, giving special attention to (1) increasing the awareness and knowledge of small employers concerning the availability and use of EPCRS, (2) taking into account special concerns and circumstances that small employers face with respect to compliance and correction of compliance failures, (3) extending the duration of the self-correction period under APRSC for significant compliance failures, (4) expanding the availability to correct insignificant compliance failures under APRSC during audit, and (5) assuring that any tax, penalty, or sanction that is imposed by reason of a compliance failure is not excessive and bears a reasonable relationship to the nature, extent, and severity of the failure.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

H. REPEAL OF THE MULTIPLE USE TEST (SEC. 608 OF THE HOUSE BILL, SEC. 608 OF THE SENATE AMENDMENT, AND SEC. 401(M) OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

Elective deferrals under a qualified cash or deferred arrangement ("section 401(k) plan") are subject to a special annual nondiscrimination test ("ADP test"). The ADP test compares the actual deferral percentages ("ADPs") of the highly compensated employee group and the nonhighly compensated employee group. The ADP for each group generally is the average of the deferral percentages separately calculated for the employees in the group who are eligible to make elective deferrals for all or a portion of the relevant plan year. Each eligible employee's deferral percentage generally is the employee's elective deferrals for the year divided by the employee's compensation for the year.

The plan generally satisfies the ADP test if the ADP of the highly compensated employee group for the current plan year is either (1) not more than 125 percent of the ADP of the nonhighly compensated employee group for the prior plan year, or (2) not more than 200 percent of the ADP of the nonhighly compensated employee group for the prior plan year and not more than 2 percentage points greater than the ADP of the nonhighly compensated employee group for the prior plan year.

Employer matching contributions and after-tax employee contributions under a defined contribution plan also are subject to a special annual nondiscrimination test ("ACP test"). The ACP test compares the actual deferral percentages ("ACPs") of the highly compensated employee group and the nonhighly compensated employee group. The ACP for each group generally is the average of the contribution percentages separately calculated for the employees in the group who are eligible to make after-tax employee contributions or who are eligible for an allocation of matching contributions for all or a portion of the relevant plan year. Each eligible employee's contribution percentage generally is the employee's aggregate after-tax employee contributions and matching contributions for the year divided by the employee's compensation for the year.

The plan generally satisfies the ACP test if the ACP of the highly compensated employee group for the current plan year is either (1) not more than 125 percent of the ACP of the nonhighly compensated employee group for the prior plan year, or (2) not more than 200 percent of the ACP of the nonhighly compensated employee group for the prior plan year and not more than 2 percentage points greater than the ACP of the nonhighly compensated employee group for the prior plan year.

For any year in which (1) at least one highly compensated employee is eligible to participate in an employer's plan or plans that are subject to both the ADP test and the ACP test, (2) the plan subject to the ADP test satisfies the ADP test but the ADP of the highly compensated employee group exceeds 125 percent of the ADP of the nonhighly compensated employee group, and (3) the plan subject to the ACP test satisfies the ACP test but the ACP of the highly compensated employee group exceeds 125 percent of the ACP of the nonhighly compensated employee group, an additional special nondiscrimination test ("multiple use test") applies to the elective deferrals, employer matching contributions, and after-tax employee contributions. The plan or plans generally satisfy the multiple use test if the sum of the ADP and the ACP of the highly compensated employee group does not exceed the greater of (1) the sum of (A) 1.25 times the greater of the ADP or the ACP of the nonhighly compensated employee group, and (B) 2 percentage points plus (but not more than 2 times) the lesser of the ADP or the ACP of the nonhighly compensated employee group, or (2) the sum of (A) 1.25 times the lesser of the ADP or the ACP of the nonhighly compensated employee group, and (B) 2 percentage points plus (but not more than 2 times) the greater of the ADP or the ACP of the nonhighly compensated employee group.

HOUSE BILL

The provision repeals the multiple use test.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for years beginning after December 31, 2000.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

I. Flexibility in Nondiscrimination, Coverage, and Line of Business Rules (sec. 609 of the House bill, sec. 609 of the Senate amendment and secs. 401(a)(4), 410(b), and 414(r) of the Code)

PRESENT LAW

A plan is not a qualified retirement plan if the contributions or benefits provided under the plan discriminate in favor of highly compensated employees (sec. 401(a)(4)). The applicable Treasury regulations set forth the exclusive rules for determining whether a plan satisfies the nondiscrimination requirement. These regulations state that the form of the plan and the effect of the plan in operation determine whether the plan is nondiscriminatory and that intent is irrelevant.

Similarly, a plan is not a qualified retirement plan if the plan does not benefit a minimum number of employees (sec. 410(b)). A plan satisfies this minimum coverage requirement if and only if it satisfies one of the tests specified in the applicable Treasury regulations. If an employer is treated as operating separate lines of business, the employer may apply the minimum coverage requirements to a plan separately with respect to the employees in each separate line of business (sec. 414(r)). Under a so-called "gateway" requirement, however, the plan must benefit a classification of employees that does not discriminate in favor of highly compensated employees in order for the employer to apply the minimum coverage requirements separately for the employees in each separate line of business. A plan satisfies this gateway requirement only if it satisfies one of the tests specified in the applicable Treasury regulations.

HOUSE BILL

The Secretary of the Treasury is directed to provide by regulation applicable to years beginning after December 31, 2000, that a plan is deemed to satisfy the nondiscrimination requirements of section 401(a)(4) if the plan satisfies the pre-1994 facts and circumstances test, satisfies the conditions prescribed by the Secretary to appropriately limit the availability of such test,[69] and is submitted to the Secretary for a determination of whether it satisfies such test (to the extent provided by the Secretary).

Similarly, a plan complies with the minimum coverage requirement of section 410(b) if the plan satisfies the pre-1989 coverage rules, is submitted to the Secretary for a determination of whether it satisfies the pre-1989 coverage rules (to the extent provided by the Secretary), and satisfies conditions prescribed by the Secretary by regulation that appropriately limit the availability of the pre-1989 coverage rules.[70]

The Secretary of the Treasury is directed to modify, on or before December 31, 2000, the existing regulations issued under section 414(r) in order to expand (to the extent that the Secretary may determine to be appropriate) the ability of a plan to demonstrate compliance with the line of business requirements based upon the facts and circumstances surrounding the design and operation of the plan, even though the plan is unable to satisfy the mechanical tests currently used to determine compliance.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill, with the following modification. The Senate amendment provides that the regulations required with respect to the nondiscrimination requirements of section 401(a)(4), the minimum coverage requirements of section 410(b), and the line of business requirements of section 414(r) are to be issued or effective, whichever is applicable, by December 31, 2001.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with the following modification. The conference agreement provides that the regulations required with respect to the nondiscrimination requirements of section 401(a)(4), the minimum coverage requirements of section 410(b), and the line of business requirements of section 414(r) are to be issued or effective, whichever is applicable, by December 31, 2002.

J. Extension to All Governmental Plans of Moratorium on Application of Certain Nondiscrimination Rules Applicable to State and Local Government Plans (sec. 610 of the House bill, sec. 610 of the Senate amendment, and sec. 1505 of the Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997, and secs. 401(a) and 401(k) of the Code)

PRESENT LAW

All governmental plans are exempt from the minimum coverage requirements (sec. 410(b)). A qualified retirement plan maintained by a State or local government is exempt from the rules concerning nondiscrimination (sec. 401(a)(4)) and minimum participation (sec. 401(a)(26)). All other governmental plans are not exempt from the nondiscrimination and minimum participation rules.

HOUSE BILL

The provision exempts all governmental plans (as defined in sec. 414(d)) from the nondiscrimination and minimum participation rules.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for plan years beginning after December 31, 2000.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House bill and the Senate amendment.

K. Notice and Consent Period Regarding Distributions; Disclosure of Optional Forms of Benefit (sec. 611 of the House bill, sec. 611 of the Senate amendment, and secs. 402(f), 411, and 417 of the Code)

PRESENT LAW

Notice and consent requirements apply to certain distributions from qualified retirement plans. These requirements relate to the content and timing of information that a plan must provide to a participant prior to a distribution, and to whether the plan must obtain the participant's consent to the distribution. The nature and extent of the notice and consent requirements applicable to a distribution depend upon the value of the participant's vested accrued benefit and whether the joint and survivor annuity requirements (sec. 417) apply to the participant.[71]

If the present value of the participant's vested accrued benefit exceeds $5,000, the plan may not distribute the participant's benefit without the written consent of the participant. The participant's consent to a distribution is not valid unless the participant has received from the plan a notice that contains a written explanation of (1) the material features and the relative values of the optional forms of benefit available under the plan, (2) the participant's right, if any, to have the distribution directly transferred to another retirement plan or IRA, and (3) the rules concerning the taxation of a distribution. If the joint and survivor annuity requirements apply to the participant, this notice also must contain a written explanation of (1) the terms and conditions of the qualified joint and survivor annuity ("QJSA"), (2) the participant's right to make, and the effect of, an election to waive the QJSA, (3) the rights of the participant's spouse with respect to a participant's waiver of the QJSA, and (4) the right to make, and the effect of, a revocation of a waiver of the QJSA. The plan generally must provide this notice to the participant no less than 30 and no more than 90 days before the date distribution commences.

[69] Any conditions prescribed by the Secretary cannot be effective before the first year beginning not less than 120 days after the date on which the condition is prescribed.

[70] Any conditions prescribed by the Secretary cannot be effective before the first year beginning not less than 120 days after the date on which the condition is prescribed.

[71] Similar provisions are contained in Title I of ERISA.

If the participant's vested accrued benefit does not exceed $5,000, the terms of the plan may provide for distribution without the participant's consent. The plan generally is required, however, to provide to the participant a notice that contains a written explanation of (1) the participant's right, if any, to have the distribution directly transferred to another retirement plan or IRA, and (2) the rules concerning the taxation of a distribution. The plan generally must provide this notice to the participant no less than 30 and no more than 90 days before the date distribution commences.

The plan administrator is required to provide to the distributee of an eligible rollover distribution an explanation of the rollover and withholding rules applicable to the distribution. This notice must generally be provided no less than 30 days and not more than 90 days before the date of the distribution.

HOUSE BILL

A qualified retirement plan is required to provide the applicable distribution notice no less than 30 days and no more than 180 days before the date distribution commences. The Secretary of the Treasury is directed to modify the applicable regulations to reflect the extension of the notice period to 180 days and to provide that the description of a participant's right, if any, to defer receipt of a distribution shall also describe the consequences of failing to defer such receipt.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for years beginning after December 31, 2000.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill with respect to the notice and consent period regarding distributions.

In addition, the Senate amendment requires that plan participants be notified of the existence of certain differences between the values of optional forms of benefit. If a plan provides optional forms of benefits and the present values of such optional forms of benefits are not actuarially equivalent as of the annuity starting date, then the plan is required to provide certain information regarding such benefits in the notice required to be provided regarding joint and survivor annuities. The information must be sufficient (as determined in accordance with Treasury regulations) to allow the participant to understand the differences in the present values of the optional forms of benefits and the effect the participant's election as to the form of benefit will have on the value of the benefits provided under the plan. The information must be provided in a manner calculated to be reasonably understood by the average plan participant.

Effective date.—Same as the House bill.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with the following modification. With respect to the disclosure of the differences between the values of optional forms of benefits, the conference agreement directs the Secretary of the Treasury to issue, not later than December 31, 2001, final regulations under section 417(a)(3). These regulations are to provide that, if a defined benefit plan offers both a qualified joint and survivor annuity and a single sum optional form of benefit, and the distributable amount under such single sum option is less than the present value (determined in accordance with section 417(e)) of the qualified joint and survivor annuity commencing as of the same annuity starting date, the applicable distribution notice shall include sufficient information to permit the participant to understand the difference between the present value of the qualified joint and survivor annuity and the amount of the single sum. If the plan offers an unmarried participant one or more annuity options that are substantially more valuable than the qualified joint and survivor annuity offered by the plan, the required comparison shall be made between the single sum option and the most valuable of the other annuity options. The conference agreement provides that the regulations shall apply to distributions made not earlier than 6 months after the date the regulations are issued.

L. Annual Report Dissemination (sec. 612 of the Senate amendment and sec. 104(b)(3) of ERISA)

PRESENT LAW

Title I of ERISA generally requires the plan administrator of each employee pension benefit plan and each employee welfare benefit plan to file an annual report concerning the plan with the Secretary of Labor within seven months after the end of the plan year. Within nine months after the end of the plan year, the plan administrator generally must provide to each participant and to each beneficiary receiving benefits under the plan a summary of the annual report filed with the Secretary of Labor for the plan year.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

Within nine months after the end of each plan year, the plan administrator is required to make available for examination a summary of the annual report filed with the Secretary of Labor for the plan year. In addition, the plan administrator is required to furnish the summary to a participant, or to a beneficiary receiving benefits under the plan, upon request.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for reports for years beginning after December 31, 1999.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with the following modification. The conference agreement provides that the requirement that the summary annual report be provided to participants and beneficiaries is satisfied if the report is reasonably available through electronic means or other new technology.

M. Modifications to the SAVER Act (sec. 613 of the Senate amendment and sec. 517 of ERISA)

PRESENT LAW

The Savings Are Vital to Everyone's Retirement ("SAVER") Act[72] initiated a public-private partnership to educate American workers about retirement savings and directed the Department of Labor to maintain an ongoing program of public information and outreach. The Act also convened a National Summit on Retirement Savings held June 4–5, 1998, and to be held again in 2001 and 2005, co-hosted by the President and the bipartisan Congressional leadership. The National Summit brings together experts in the fields of employee benefits and retirement savings, key leaders of government, and interested parties from the private sector and general public. The delegates are selected by the Congressional leadership and the President. The National Summit is a public-private partnership, receiving substantial funding from private sector contributions. The goals of the National Summits are to: (1) advance the public's knowledge and understanding of retirement savings and facilitate the development of a broad-based, public education program; (2) identify the barriers which hinder workers from setting aside adequate savings for retirement and impede employers, especially small employers, from assisting their workers in accumulating retirement savings; and (3) develop specific recommendations for legislative, executive, and private sector actions to promote retirement income savings among American workers.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The provision clarifies that future National Summits on Retirement Savings are to be held in the month of September in 2001 and 2005, and would add an additional National Summit in 2009. To facilitate the administration of future National Summits, the Department of Labor is given authority to enter into cooperative agreements (pursuant to the Federal Grant and Cooperative Agreement Act of 1977) with its 1999 summit partner, the American Savings Education Council.

Six new statutory delegates are added to future National Summits: the Chairman and Ranking Member of the House Ways and Means Committee, the Senate Finance Committee, and the Subcommittee on Employer-Employee Relations of the House Committee on Education and the Workforce. Further, the President, in consultation with the Congressional leadership, may appoint up to three percent of the delegates (not to exceed 10) from a list of nominees provided by the private sector partner in Summit administration. The provision also clarifies that new delegates are to be appointed for each future National Summit (as was the intent of the original legislation) and sets deadlines for their appointment.

The provision also sets deadlines for the Department of Labor to publish the Summit agenda, gives the Department of Labor limited reception and representation authority, and mandates that the Department of Labor consult with the Congressional leadership in drafting the post-Summit report.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment.

N. Studies (sec. 614 of the Senate amendment)

PRESENT LAW

No provision.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

Report on pension coverage

The bill directs the Secretary to report to the Senate Committee on Finance and the House Committee on Ways and Means regarding the effect of the bill on pension coverage, including any expansion of coverage for low- and moderate-income workers, levels of pension benefits, quality of coverage, worker's access to and participation in plans, and retirement security. This report is required to be submitted no later than five years after the date of enactment.

Studies of preretirement uses of benefits and investment decisions

The bill directs the Secretary to conduct a study of the present-law rules that permit individuals to access their IRA or qualified retirement plan benefits prior to retirement, including an analysis of the use of the existing rules and the extent to which such rules undermine the goal of accumulating adequate resources for retirement. In addition, the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to conduct a study of the types of investment decisions made by IRA owners and participants in self-directed qualified retirement plans, including an analysis of the existing restrictions on investments and the extent to which additional restrictions would facilitate the accumulation of adequate income for retirement. The studies are required to be submitted to the Senate Committee on Finance and the House Committee on Ways and Means no later than January 1, 2002.

Effective date

The provisions are effective on the date of enactment.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with the following modification. The conference agreement does not direct the Secretary to conduct the study relating to pre-retirement access to IRA or qualified retirement plan assets or the study relating to the types of investment decisions made by IRA owners and participants in self-directed qualified retirement plans.

TITLE VII: OTHER ERISA PROVISIONS

A. EXTENSION OF PBGC MISSING PARTICIPANTS PROGRAM (SECS. 206(F) AND 4050 OF ERISA)

PRESENT LAW

The plan administrator of a single-employer defined benefit pension plan that is subject to Title IV of ERISA and terminates under a standard termination is required to distribute the assets of the plan. With respect to a participant whom the plan administrator cannot locate after a diligent search, the plan administrator satisfies the distribution requirement only by purchasing irrevocable commitments from an insurer to provide all benefit liabilities under the plan or transferring the participant's designated benefit to the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation ("PBGC"), which holds the benefit of the missing participant as trustee until the PBGC locates the missing participant and distributes the benefit.

The PBGC missing participant program is not available to multiemployer plans or defined contribution plans and other plans not covered by Title IV of ERISA.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The PBGC is directed to prescribe for terminating multiemployer plans rules similar to the present-law missing participant rules applicable to terminating single employer plans that are subject to Title IV of ERISA.

In addition, plan administrators of certain types of plans not subject to the PBGC termination insurance program under present law are permitted, but not required, to elect to transfer missing participants' benefits to the PBGC upon plan termination. Specifically, the provision extends the missing participants program to defined contribution plans, defined benefit plans that have no more than 25 active participants and are maintained by professional service employers, and the portion of defined benefit plans that provide benefits based upon the separate accounts of participants and therefor are treated as defined contribution plans under ERISA.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for distributions made after final regulations under the provision are prescribed.

B. REDUCE PBGC PREMIUMS FOR SMALL AND NEW PLANS (SEC. 4006 OF ERISA)

PRESENT LAW

Under present law, the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation ("PBGC") provides insurance protection for participants and beneficiaries under certain defined benefit pension plans by guaranteeing certain basic benefits under the plan in the event the plan is terminated with insufficient assets to pay benefits promised under the plan. The guaranteed benefits are funded in part by premium payments from employers who sponsor defined benefit plans. The amount of the required annual PBGC premium for a single-employer plan is generally a flat rate premium of $19 per participant and an additional variable-rate premium based on a charge of $9 per $1,000 of unfunded vested benefits. Unfunded vested benefits under a plan generally means (1) the unfunded current liability for vested benefits under the plan, over (2) the value of the plan's assets, reduced by any credit balance in the funding standard account. No variable-rate premium is imposed for a year if contributions to the plan were at least equal to the full funding limit.

The PBGC guarantee is phased in ratably in the case of plans that have been in effect for less than 5 years, and with respect to benefit increases from a plan amendment that was in effect for less than 5 years before termination of the plan.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

Reduced flat-rate premiums for new plans of small employers

Under the conference agreement, for the first five plan years of a new single-employer plan of a small employer, the flat-rate PBGC premium is $5 per plan participant.

A small employer is a contributing sponsor that, on the first day of the plan year, has 100 or fewer employees. For this purpose, all employees of the members of the controlled group of the contributing sponsor are taken into account. In the case of a plan to which more than one unrelated contributing sponsor contributes, employees of all contributing sponsors (and their controlled group members) are taken into account in determining whether the plan is a plan of a small employer.

A new plan means a defined benefit plan maintained by a contributing sponsor if, during the 36-month period ending on the date of adoption of the plan, such contributing sponsor (or controlled group member or a predecessor of either) has not established or maintained a plan subject to PBGC coverage with respect to which benefits were accrued for substantially the same employees as are in the new plan.

Reduced variable-rate PBGC premium for new plans

The provision provides that the variable-rate premium is phased in for new defined benefit plans over a six-year period starting with the plan's first plan year. The amount of the variable-rate premium is a percentage of the variable premium otherwise due, as follows: 0 percent of the otherwise applicable variable-rate premium in the first plan year; 20 percent in the second plan year; 40 percent in the third plan year; 60 percent in the fourth plan year; 80 percent in the fifth plan year; and 100 percent in the sixth plan year (and thereafter).

A new defined benefit plan is defined as described above under the flat-rate premium provision relating to new small employer plans.

Reduced variable-rate PBGC premium for small plans

In the case of a plan of a small employer, the variable-rate premium is no more than $5 multiplied by the number of plan participants in the plan at the end of the preceding plan year. For purposes of this provision, a small employer is a contributing sponsor that, on the first day of the plan year, has 25 or fewer employees. For this purpose, all employees of the members of the controlled group of the contributing sponsor are taken into account. In the case of a plan to which more than one unrelated contributing sponsor contributes, employees of all contributing sponsors (and their controlled group members) are taken into account in determining whether the plan is a plan of a small employer.

Effective date

The reduction of the flat-rate premium for new plans of small employers and the reduction of the variable-rate premium for new plans are effective with respect to plans established after December 31, 2000. The reduction of the variable-rate premium for small plans is effective with respect to plan years beginning after December 31, 2000.

C. AUTHORIZATION FOR PBGC TO PAY INTEREST ON PREMIUM OVERPAYMENT REFUNDS (SEC. 4007(B) OF ERISA)

PRESENT LAW

The PBGC charges interest on underpayments of premiums, but is not authorized to pay interest on overpayments.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement allows the PBGC to pay interest on overpayments made by premium payors. Interest paid on overpayments is to be calculated at the same rate and in the same manner as interest is charged on premium underpayments.

Effective date.—The provision is effective with respect to interest accruing for periods beginning not earlier than the date of enactment.

D. RULES FOR SUBSTANTIAL OWNER BENEFITS IN TERMINATED PLANS (SECS. 4021, 4022, 4043 AND 4044 OF ERISA)

PRESENT LAW

Under present law, the PBGC provides participants and beneficiaries in a defined benefit pension plan with certain guarantees as to the receipt of benefits under the plan in case of plan termination. The employer sponsoring the defined benefit pension plan is required to pay premiums to the PBGC to provide insurance for the guaranteed benefits. In general, the PBGC will guarantee all basic benefits which are payable in periodic installments for the life (or lives) of the participant and his or her beneficiaries and are non-forfeitable at the time of plan termination. The amount of the guaranteed benefit is subject to certain limitations. One limitation is that the plan (or an amendment to the plan which increases benefits) must be in effect for 60 months before termination for the PBGC to guarantee the full amount of basic benefits for a plan participant, other than a substantial owner. In the case of a substantial owner, the guaranteed basic benefit is phased in over 30 years beginning with participation in the plan. A substantial owner is one who owns the entire interest in an unincorporated trade or business, or who owns, directly or indirectly, more than 10 percent of the voting stock of a corporation or all the stock of a corporation, or, in the case of a partnership, one who owns, directly or indirectly, more than 10 percent of either the capital interest or profits interest. Special rules restricting the amount of benefit guaranteed and the allocation of assets also apply to substantial owners.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The provision provides that the 60 month phase-in of guaranteed benefits applies to a substantial owner with less than a 50 percent ownership interest. For a substantial owner with a 50 percent or more ownership interest ("majority owner"), the phase-in occurs over a 10-year period and depends on the number of years the plan has been in effect. The majority owner's guaranteed benefit is limited so that it may not be more than the amount phased in over 60 months for other participants. The rules regarding allocation of assets apply to substantial owners, other than majority owners, in the same manner as other participants.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for plan terminations with respect to which notices of intent to terminate are provided, or for which proceedings for termination are instituted by the PBGC, after December 31, 2000.

E. Multiemployer Plan Benefits Guarantee (sec. 4022A of ERISA)

PRESENT LAW

The PBGC guarantees benefits of workers in multiemployer plans. The monthly guarantee is equal to the participant's years of service multiplied by the sum of (1) 100 percent of the first $5 of the monthly benefit accrual rate, and (2) 75 percent of the next $15 of the accrual rate. The level of benefits guaranteed by the PBGC under the multiemployer program has not increased since 1980. For a retiree with 30 years of service, the maximum guaranteed annual benefit is $5,850. The maximum guarantee under the PBGC's single-employer program is adjusted each year to reflect changes in the social security wage index.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement adjusts the amount guaranteed in multiemployer plans to account for changes in the social security wage index since 1980. Under the conference agreement, the PBGC guarantees a monthly benefit equal to the participant's years of service multiplied by the sum of (1) 100 percent of the first $11 of the monthly benefit accrual rate, and (2) 75 percent of the next $33 of the accrual rate. Thus, the conference agreement increases the maximum annual guarantee for a retiree with 30 years of service to $12,870.

Effective date.—The provision applies to benefits payable after the date of enactment, except that the provision does not apply to benefits under any multiemployer plan that has received financial assistance from the PBGC under section 4261 of ERISA within the 1-year period ending on the date of enactment.

F. Civil Penalties for Breach of Fiduciary Responsibility (sec. 502 of ERISA)

PRESENT LAW

Present law requires the Secretary of Labor to assess a civil penalty against (1) a fiduciary who breaches a fiduciary responsibility under, or commits a violation of, part 4 of Title I of ERISA, or (2) any other person who knowingly participates in such a breach or violation. The penalty is equal to 20 percent of the "applicable recovery amount" that is paid pursuant to a settlement agreement with the Secretary of Labor or that a court orders to be paid in a judicial proceeding brought by the Secretary of Labor to enforce ERISA's fiduciary responsibility provisions. The Secretary of Labor may waive or reduce the penalty only if the Secretary finds in writing that either (1) the fiduciary or other person acted reasonably and in good faith, or (2) it is reasonable to expect that the fiduciary or other person cannot restore all the losses without severe financial hardship unless the waiver or reduction is granted.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement makes the assessment of the penalty discretionary with the Secretary of Labor, rather than mandatory. This change will allow the Secretary to refrain from imposing the penalty in certain cases as well as to assess a penalty of less than 20 percent of the applicable recovery amount. The requirement of a settlement agreement is also eliminated. The applicable recovery amount is any amount recovered by a plan or by a participant or beneficiary more than 30 days after the fiduciary's or other person's receipt of a written notice of the violation from the Department of Labor ("DOL"). Payments made after the 30-day grace period,[73] whether they are made pursuant to a settlement agreement, or simply to discourage the DOL from bringing a legal action, are subject to the penalty, as are amounts recovered pursuant to a court order. ERISA section 502(l) is also amended to clarify that the term "applicable recovery amount" includes payments by third parties that are made on behalf of the relevant fiduciary or other persons liable for the amount that is recovered, including those who did not actually pay. These changes prevent avoidance of the penalty by having an unrelated third party pay the recovery amount.

Effective date.—The provision applies to any breach of fiduciary responsibility or other violation of part 4 of Title I of ERISA occurring on or after the date of enactment. The change with respect to "applicable recovery amount" includes a transition rule whereby a breach or other violation occurring before the date of enactment which continues past the 180th day from enactment (and which may have been discontinued during that period) is treated as having occurred after the date of enactment (to avoid having to make a complex determination regarding how much of the applicable recovery amount for such continuing violations should be attributed to the post-enactment part of the violation).

G. Benefit Suspension Notice (sec. 203 of ERISA)

PRESENT LAW

Under present law (ERISA sec. 203(a)(3)(B)), a plan will not fail to satisfy the vesting requirements with respect to a participant by reason of suspending payment of the participant's benefits while such participant is employed. Under the applicable Department of Labor ("DOL") regulations, such a suspension is only permissible if the plan notifies the participant during the first calendar month or payroll period in which the plan withholds benefit payments. Such notice must provide certain information and must also include a copy of the plan's provisions relating to the suspension of payments.

In the case of a plan that does not pay benefits to active participants upon attainment of normal retirement age, the employer must monitor plan participants to determine when any participant who is still employed attains normal retirement age. In order to suspend payment of such a participant's benefits, generally a plan must, as noted above, promptly provide the participant with a suspension notice.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement directs the Secretary of Labor to revise the regulations relating to the benefit suspension notice to generally permit the information currently required to be set forth in a suspension notice to be included in the summary plan description. The provision also directs the Secretary of Labor to eliminate the requirement that the notice include a copy of relevant plan provisions. However, individuals reentering the workforce to resume work with a former employer after they have begun to receive benefits will still receive the notification of the suspension of benefits (and a copy of the plan's provisions relating to suspension of payments). In addition, if a reduced rate of future benefit accruals will apply to a returning employee (as of his or her first date of participation in the plan after returning to work) who has begin to receive benefits, the notice must include a statement that the rate of future benefit accruals will be reduced.

Effective date.—The provision applies to plan years beginning after December 31, 2000.

Subtitle H. Provisions Relating to Plan Amendments (sec. 481 of the bill) (sec. 701 of the House bill and sec. 701 of the Senate Amendment)

PRESENT LAW

Plan amendments to reflect amendments to the law generally must be made by the time prescribed for filing the income tax return of the employer for the employer's taxable year in which the change in the law occurs.

A plan amendment may not decrease the accrued benefit of a plan participant (sec. 411(d)(6)).

HOUSE BILL

The House bill permits certain plan amendments made pursuant to the changes made by the bill (or regulations issued under the provisions of the bill) to be retroactively effective. If the plan amendment meets the requirements of the bill, then the plan is treated as being operated in accordance with its terms and the amendment does not violate the prohibition of reductions of accrued benefits. In order for this treatment to apply, the plan amendment must be made on or before the last day of the first plan year beginning on or after January 1, 2003 (January 1, 2005, in the case of a governmental plan). If the amendment is required to be made to retain qualified status as a result of the changes in the bill (or regulations) the amendment must be made retroactively effective as of the date on which the change became effective with respect to the plan and the plan must be operated in compliance until the amendment is made. Amendments that are not required to retain qualified status but that are made pursuant to the changes made by the bill (or applicable regulations) may be made retroactive as of the first day the plan was operated in accordance with the amendment.

---

[73] The 30-day period may be extended by the Secretary of Labor.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

SENATE AMENDMENT

The Senate amendment is the same as the House bill, except that the Senate amendment does not provide relief from the prohibition on reductions of accrued benefits.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the House bill, with the modification described below. As under the House bill, the provision applies to plan amendments required to maintain qualified status, as well as other amendments pursuant to the provisions of the bill (or applicable regulations). A plan amendment is not considered to be pursuant to the bill (or applicable regulations) if it has an effective date before the effective date of the provision of the bill (or regulations) to which it relates. Similarly, the provision does not provide relief from section 411(d)(6) for periods prior to the effective date of the relevant provision of the bill (or regulations) or the plan amendment.

The conference agreement provides that the Secretary is given authority to provide exceptions to the relief from the prohibition on reductions in accrued benefits. It is intended that the Secretary will not permit inappropriate reductions in contributions or benefits that are not directly related to the provisions of the bill. For example, it is intended that a plan that incorporates the section 415 limits by reference could be retroactively amended to impose the section 415 limits in effect before the bill. On the other hand, suppose a plan that incorporates the section 401(a)(17) limit on compensation by reference provides for an employer contribution of 3 percent of compensation. It is expected that the Secretary would provide that the plan could not be amended retroactively to reduce the contribution percentage, even though the reduction will result in the same dollar level of contributions for some participants because of the increase in compensation taken into account under the plan. As another example, suppose that under present law a plan is top-heavy and therefore a minimum benefit is required under the plan, and that under the provisions of the bill, the plan would not be considered to be top heavy. It is expected that the Secretary would generally permit plans to be retroactively amended to reflect the new top-heavy provisions of the bill.

TITLE V. INCENTIVES FOR PUBLIC SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION AND MODERNIZATION (SECS. 501–505 OF THE BILL AND SECS. 103, 148, 1397E AND NEW SECS. 1397F AND 1397G OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

Tax-exempt bonds

In general

Interest on debt incurred by States or local governments is excluded from income if the proceeds of the borrowing are used to carry out governmental functions of those entities or the debt is repaid with governmental funds (sec. 103). Like other activities carried out and paid for by States and local governments, the construction, renovation, and operation of public schools is an activity eligible for financing with the proceeds of tax-exempt bonds.

Interest on bonds that nominally are issued by States or local governments, but the proceeds of which are used (directly or indirectly) by a private person and payment of which is derived from funds of such a private person is taxable unless the purpose of the borrowing is approved specifically in the Code or in a non-Code provision of a revenue Act. These bonds are called "private activity bonds." The term "private person" includes the Federal Government and all other individuals and entities other than States or local governments.

Private activities eligible for financing with tax-exempt private activity bonds

The Code includes several exceptions permitting States or local governments to act as conduits providing tax-exempt financing for private activities. Both capital expenditures and limited working capital expenditures of charitable organizations described in section 501(c)(3) of the Code—including elementary, secondary, and post-secondary schools—may be financed with tax-exempt private activity bonds ("qualified 501(c)(3) bonds").

In most cases, the volume of tax-exempt private activity bonds is restricted by aggregate annual limits imposed on bonds issued by issuers within each State. These annual volume limits equal $50 per resident of the State, or $150 million if greater. The annual State private activity bond volume limits are scheduled to increase to the greater of $75 per resident of the State or $225 million in calendar year 2007. The increase will be phased in ratably beginning in calendar year 2003.[1] This increase was enacted by the Tax and Trade Relief Extension Act of 1998. Qualified 501(c)(3) bonds are among the tax-exempt private activity bonds that are not subject to these volume limits.

Private activity tax-exempt bonds may not be used to finance schools owned or operated by private, for-profit businesses.

Arbitrage restrictions on tax-exempt bonds

The Federal income tax does not apply to income of States and local governments that is derived from the exercise of an essential governmental function. To prevent these tax-exempt entities from issuing more Federally subsidized tax-exempt bonds than is necessary for the activity being financed or from issuing such bonds earlier than necessary, the Code includes arbitrage restrictions limiting the ability to profit from investment of tax-exempt bond proceeds. In general, arbitrage profits may be earned only during specified periods (e.g., defined "temporary periods") before funds are needed for the purpose of the borrowing or on specified types of investments (e.g., "reasonably required reserve or replacement funds"). Subject to limited exceptions, investment profits that are earned during these periods or on such investments must be rebated to the Federal Government.

The Code includes three exceptions applicable to education-related bonds. First, issuers of all types of tax-exempt bonds are not required to rebate arbitrage profits if all of the proceeds of the bonds are spent for the purpose of the borrowing within six months after issuance. In the case of governmental bonds (including bonds to finance public schools) the six-month expenditure exception is treated as satisfied if at least 95 percent of the proceeds is spent within six months and the remaining five percent is spent within 12 months after the bonds are issued.

Second, in the case of bonds to finance certain construction activities, including school construction and renovation, the six-month period is extended to 24 months for construction proceeds. Arbitrage profits earned on construction proceeds are not required to be rebated if all such proceeds (other than certain retainage amounts) are spent by the end of the 24-month period and prescribed intermediate spending percentages are satisfied.

Third, governmental bonds issued by "small" governments are not subject to the rebate requirement. Small governments are defined as general purpose governmental units that issue no more than $5 million of tax-exempt governmental bonds in a calendar year. The $5 million limit is increased to $10 million if at least $5 million of the bonds are used to finance public schools.

Another exception to the arbitrage restriction, enacted as part of the Tax Reform Act of 1984, provides that the pledge of income from investments in a Fund established under a provision of a State constitution adopted in 1876 as security for a limited amount of tax-exempt bonds will not cause interest on those bonds to be taxable. The terms of this exception are limited to State constitutional or statutory restrictions in effect as of October 9, 1969. The Fund consists of certain State lands that were set aside for the benefit of higher education, the income from mineral rights to these lands, and certain other earnings on Fund assets. The State constitution directs that monies held in the Fund are to be invested in interest-bearing obligations and other securities. The State constitution does not permit the expenditure or mortgage of the Fund for any purpose. Income from the Fund is apportioned between two university systems operated by the State. Tax-exempt bonds issued by the two university systems are secured by and payable from the income of the Fund. These bonds are used to finance buildings and other permanent improvements for the universities.

The General Assembly of the State approved proposed constitutional amendments regarding the manner in which amounts in the Fund are paid for the benefit of the two university systems. These amendments were voted on and passed by the State's citizens in November 1999. The State constitutional amendments have the effect of permitting the Fund to make annual distributions similar to standard university endowment funds, rather than the previous practice, which tied distributions to annual income performance, creating a variable pattern of distributions. Since these amendments were not in effect as of October 9, 1969, the amendments eliminate the benefits of the 1984 exception from the tax-exempt bond arbitrage restrictions.

Qualified Zone Academy Bonds ("QZABs")

As an alternative to traditional tax-exempt bonds, certain States and local governments are given the authority to issue "qualified zone academy bonds." Under present law, $400 million of qualified zone academy bonds may be issued per year in 1998, 1999, 2000, and 2001. The $400 million bond authority is allocated each year among the States according to their respective populations of individuals below the poverty line. Each State, in turn, allocates the credit to qualified zone academies within such State. A State may carry over any unused allocation into subsequent years (the first two years following the unused limitation year; three years for carryforwards from 1998 or 1999).

To be a qualified zone academy bond, a bond must satisfy several requirements. First, the bond must be issued pursuant to an allocation of bond authority from the issuer's State educational agency. Second, at least 95 percent of the bond proceeds must be used for an eligible purpose at a qualified zone academy. Eligible purposes include renovating school facilities, acquiring equipment, developing course materials, or training teachers. A qualified zone academy is a public school (or an academic program within a public school) that is designed in cooperation with business and is either (1) located in an empowerment zone or enterprise community or (2) attended by students at least 35 percent of whom are estimated to be eligible for free or reduced-cost lunches under the National School Lunch Act. Finally, private businesses must have promised to contribute to the qualified zone academy certain property or services with a present value equal to at least 10 percent of the bond proceeds.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

Extension of authority to issue present-law QZABs

The conference agreement extends authority to issue QZABs for two additional years, through December 31, 2003. Except as described below, present-law requirements for these bonds are retained.

Extension of modified QZAB authority to school construction

The conference agreement extends authority to issue QZABs, with modifications, to public school construction. The agreement authorizes issuance of up to $5 billion per year of school construction QZABs in 2001, 2002, and 2003. The $5 billion of annual authority will be allocated to the States (including the District of Columbia and U.S. possessions) by the Treasury Department on the following basis: 50 percent of the aggregate annual amount is allocated to the States based on population and 50 percent is allocated based on the portion of the State's population that lives in poverty. These allocations are to be based on the most recently available Census Bureau data. The State allocations are subject to a "small State floor" of $25 million per State.

Unissued tax-credit bond authority may be carried forward for up to two years. As is true under the current QZAB allocation rules, bond authority is treated as allocated on a "FIFO" basis.

Subject to a special rule for certain larger school districts, Governors are granted interim authority to allocate their State's authorized school construction QZAB issuance among school districts in the State unless State legislatures prescribe different allocation rules. For larger local school districts, defined as districts having school age populations in excess of 40,000, the conference agreement provides a minimum allocation (which cannot be overridden by State action) in an amount equal to the percentage of the State's total population that resides in the school district. The term "school age population" is defined as children ages five through seventeen.

In addition to the $5 billion general aggregate annual bond authority, the conference agreement authorizes up to $200 million of school construction QZABs to be issued to finance public schools operated by or for the benefit of Indian tribes. This $200 million of additional authority is a one-time authorization which may be allocated by the Treasury Department among Indian tribes at any time during the five-year period when school construction QZABs and present-law QZABs may be issued. Both the allocation authority and the authority to issue these bonds expires after December 31, 2005.

School construction is defined as capital expenditures for new construction, renovation, or repair or public schools (real property of a character subject to the allowance for depreciation), including charter schools, and the acquisition of functionally related and subordinate land. Unlike present-law QZABs, contributions by private businesses are optional, but not required, for schools receiving school construction QZAB financing. Additionally, the school construction QZABs are not limited to schools within an empowerment zone or enterprise community, or to schools satisfying the free or reduced-cost lunch criteria.

Rules applicable to QZABs issued after December 31, 2000 and to school construction QZABs

The following administrative rules apply to QZABs issued after December 31, 2000, and to the new modified QZABs for school construction:

(1) The maximum term of the bonds is 15 years.

(2) Information reporting requirements similar to the requirements that apply under present law to tax-exempt bonds (sec. 149(e)) are extended to these bonds.

(3) Eligible recipients of the tax credits are expanded to include all C corporations (but not S corporations or individuals).

(4) Credits accrue to holders on a quarterly basis (rather than annually as under the present-law QZAB program).

(5) Credit rates are set by reference to the daily corporate rate index established by the Treasury Department, and the credit rate for each bond issue is set as of the day before the date the bonds are issued (i.e., sold).

(6) As under the present-law QZAB program, credits are includible in the bondholder's gross income, but tax credits may be claimed against both regular income tax and the alternative minimum tax.

(7) All property financed with tax-credit bonds must be owned by a State or local government. Further, all such property must be used for a qualified public school purpose during the entire period that the bonds are outstanding. Failure to use the property for a qualified purpose results in termination of tax credits beginning on the later of (a) the date of bond issuance of (b) three years before the change in use occurs. Issuers are obligated to pay the Federal Government an amount equal to all credits accruing after the stated date (plus interest); bondholders are secondarily liable for this amount.

(8) Tax-credit bonds may not be issued to refinance any outstanding debt except certain "bridge financing," defined as construction period financing that (a) is issued after the date of the conference agreement's enactment; (b) has a term not exceeding one year and (c) is issued for a project identified for tax-credit bond financing before issuance of the bridge financing.

(9) Arbitrage restrictions similar to those that apply to tax-exempt bonds (as modified by the conference agreement) are extended to present-law QZABs and school construction QZABs.

Bond proceeds must be spent for the purpose of the borrowing within 48 months after bonds are issued, with intermediate spending requirements being prescribed:

Within	Must spend at least
12 months	10 percent
24 months	30 percent
36 months	60 percent
48 months	100 percent (less present-law retainage amounts (not exceeding 5 percent) which must be spent within 60 months)

Issuers failing to satisfy the intermediate 12, 24, or 36-month expenditure requirements must pay the Federal Government an amount equal to the investment earnings on all proceeds of the bond issue.

Issuers failing to satisfy the 48-month or 60-month expenditure requirements must redeem an amount of bonds having a face amount equal to the unspent proceeds.

A "small governmental unit" exception is provided to these arbitrage restrictions. This exception is coordinated with the present-law tax-exempt bond exception for these units (as that exception is modified by the agreement) to ensure that issuers do not claim double benefits.

Rules similar to the tax-exempt bond sinking fund restrictions are extended to tax-credit bonds. Under these rules, all replacement funds constituting a sinking fund under the tax-exempt bond rules must be invested in non-interest-bearing State and Local Government Series ("SLGS") obligations issued by the Treasury.

(10) A State must allocate its school construction QZAB authority in accordance with a qualified allocation plan. A qualified allocation plan is to contain, among other things: (a) an identification of the State's needs for public school facilities, and (b) a description of how the State will make allocations to address those needs, including how the State will ensure the needs of both rural, suburban, and urban areas will be recognized, ensure that the needs of localities with the greatest needs will be met and give priority to the role of charter schools in achieving State educational objectives. This requirement applies to allocations of tax-credit bond authority made on the date that is six months after the date the conference agreement is enacted.

Effective date.—These provisions apply to bonds issued in calendar years beginning after December 31, 2000.

Increase in the amount of governmental bonds that may be issued by governments qualifying for the "small governmental unit" arbitrage rebate exception

The additional amount of governmental bonds for public schools that small governmental units may issue without being subject to the arbitrage rebate requirement is increased from $5 million to $10 million. Thus, these governmental units may issue up to $15 million of governmental bonds in a calendar year provided that at least $10 million of the bonds are used to finance public school construction expenditures. This exception is coordinated with the tax- credit bond exception for these units to ensure that issuers do not claim double benefits, i.e., both tax-credit bonds and tax-exempt bonds are taken into account for purposes of this limitation.

Effective date.—The provision applies to bonds issued in calendar years beginning after December 31, 2000.

Conform provisions relating to arbitrage treatment to reflect state constitutional amendments

The conference agreement conforms the 1984 exception to the State constitutional amendments to permit its continued applicability to bonds of the two university systems. Limitations on the aggregate amount of bonds which may benefit from the exception are not modified.

Effective date.—The provision takes effect on January 1, 2001.

Construction bond expenditure rule for governmental bonds for public schools

The present-law 24-month expenditure exception to the arbitrage rebate requirement is liberalized for certain public school bonds. Under the agreement, no rebate is required with respect to earnings on available construction proceeds of public school bonds if the proceeds are spent within 48 months after the bonds are issued and the following intermediate spending levels are satisfied:

Within	Must spend at least
12 months	10 percent
24 months	30 percent
36 months	60 percent
48 months	100 percent (less present-law retainage amounts (not exceeding 5 percent) which must be spent within 60 months)

Effective date.—The provision applies to bonds issued after December 31, 2000.

Issuance of tax-exempt private activity bonds for certain public school facilities

The private activities for which tax-exempt bonds may be issued are expanded to include elementary and secondary public school facilities which are owned by private, for-profit corporations pursuant to public-private partnership agreements with a State or local educational agency. The term school facility includes school buildings and functionally related and subordinate land (including stadiums or other athletic facilities primarily used for school events) and depreciable personal property used in the school facility. The school facilities for which these bonds are issued must be operated by a public educational agency as part of a system of public schools.

A public-private partnership agreement is defined as an arrangement pursuant to which the for-profit corporate party constructs, rehabilitates, refurbishes or equips a school facility. The agreement must provide that, at the end of the contract term, ownership of the bond-financed property is transferred to the public school agency party to the agreement for no additional consideration.

Issuance of these bonds is subject to a separate annual per-State volume limit equal to the greater of $10 per resident ($5 million, if greater) in lieu of the present-law State private activity bond volume limits. As with the present-law State private activity bond volume limits, States decide how to allocate the bond authority to State and local government agencies. Bond authority that is unused in the year in which it arises may be carried forward for up to three years for public school projects under rules similar to the carryforward rules of the present-law private activity bond volume limits.

Effective date.—These provisions are effective for bonds issued after December 31, 2000.

TITLE VI. COMMUNITY RENEWAL PROVISIONS

A. RENEWAL COMMUNITY PROVISIONS (SECS. 601-602 OF THE BILL AND SECS. 51, 469, AND NEW SECS. 1400E-J OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

In recent years, provisions have been added to the Internal Revenue Code that target specific geographic areas for special Federal income tax treatment. For example, empowerment zones and enterprise communities generally provide tax incentives for businesses that locate within certain geographic areas designated by the Secretaries of Housing and Urban Development ("HUD") and Agriculture.

HOUSE BILL

No provision. However, H.R. 4923, as passed by the House, authorizes the designation of 40 "renewal communities" within which special tax incentives will be available. The following is a description of the designation process and the tax incentives that would be available within the renewal communities.

Designation process

Designation of 40 renewal communities.—The Secretary of HUD,[2] is authorized to designate up to 40 "renewal communities" from areas nominated by States and local governments. At least eight of the designated communities must be in rural areas. The Secretary of HUD is required to publish (within four months after enactment) regulations describing the nomination and selection process. Designations of renewal communities are to be made within 24 months after the regulations are published. The designation of an area as a renewal community generally will be effective on July 1, 2001, and will terminate after December 31, 2009.

Eligibility criteria.—To be designated as a renewal community, a nominated area must meet the following criteria: (1) each census tract must have a poverty rate of at least 20 percent;[3] (2) in the case of an urban area, at least 70 percent of the households have incomes below 80 percent of the median income of households within the local government jurisdiction; (3) the unemployment rate is at least 1.5 times the national unemployment rate; and (4) the area is one of pervasive poverty, unemployment, and general distress. Those areas with the highest average ranking of eligibility factors (1), (2), and (3) above would be designated as renewal communities. A nominated area within the District of Columbia becomes a renewal community (without regard to its ranking of eligibility factors) provided that it satisfies the area and eligibility requirements and the required State and local commitments described below.[4] The Secretary of HUD shall take into account in selecting areas for designation the extent to which such areas have a high incidence of crime, as well as whether the area has census tracts identified in the May 12, 1998, report of the General Accounting Office regarding the identification of economically distressed areas.

There are no geographic size limitations placed on renewal communities. Instead, the boundary of a renewal community must be continuous. In addition, the renewal community must have a minimum population of 4,000 if the community is located within a metropolitan statistical area (at least 1,000 in all other cases), and a maximum population of not more than 200,000. The population limitations do not apply to any renewal community that is entirely within an Indian reservation.

Required State and local commitments.—In order for an area to be designated as a renewal community, State and local governments are required to submit a written course of action in which the State and local governments promise to take at least four of the following governmental actions within the nominated area: (1) a reduction of tax rates or fees; (2) an increase in the level of efficiency of local services; (3) crime reduction strategies; (4) actions to remove or streamline governmental requirements; (5) involvement by private entities and community groups, such as to provide jobs and job training and financial assistance; and (6) the gift (or sale at below fair market value) of surplus realty by the State or local government to community organizations or private companies.

In addition, the nominating State and local governments must promise to promote economic growth in the nominated area by repealing or not enforcing four of the following: (1) licensing requirements for occupations that do not ordinarily require a professional degree; (2) zoning restrictions on home-based businesses that do not create a public nuisance; (3) permit requirements for street vendors who do not create a public nuisance; (4) zoning or other restrictions that impede the formation of schools or child care centers; and (5) franchises or other restrictions on competition for businesses providing public services, including but not limited to taxicabs, jitneys, cable television, or trash hauling, unless such regulations are necessary for and well-tailored to the protection of health and safety.

Empowerment zones and enterprise communities seeking designation as renewal communities.—An empowerment zone or enterprise community can apply for designation as a renewal community. If a renewal community designation is granted, then an area's designation as an empowerment zone or enterprise community ceases as of the date the area's designation as a renewal community takes effect.

Tax incentives for renewal communities

Under H.R. 4923, the following tax incentives are available during the period beginning July 1, 2001, and ending December 31, 2009.

Zero-percent capital gain rate.—H.R. 4923 provides a zero-percent capital gains rate for gain from the sale of a qualified community asset acquired after June 30, 2001, and before January 1, 2010, and held for more than five years. A "qualified community asset" includes: (1) qualified community stock (meaning original-issue stock purchased for cash in a renewal community business); (2) a qualified community partnership interest (meaning a partnership interest acquired for cash in a renewal community business); and (3) qualified community business property (meaning tangible property originally used in a renewal community business by the taxpayer) that is purchased or substantially improved after June 30, 2001.

[2] In making the designations, the Secretary of HUD must consult with the Secretaries of Agriculture, Commerce, Labor, Treasury, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget; and the Administrator of the Small Business Administration (and the Secretary of the Interior in the case of an area on an Indian reservation).

[3] Determined using 1990 census data.

[4] The designation of a nominated area within the District of Columbia as a renewal community becomes effective on January 1, 2003 (upon the expiration of the designation of the District of Columbia Enterprise Zone).

A "renewal community business" is similar to the present-law definition of an enterprise zone business.[5] Property will continue to be a qualified community asset if sold (or otherwise transferred) to a subsequent purchaser, provided that the property continues to represent an interest in (or tangible property used in) a renewal community business. The termination of an area's status as a renewal community will not affect whether property is a qualified community asset, but any gain attributable to the period before July 1, 2001, or after December 31, 2014, will not be eligible for the exclusion.

Renewal community employment credit.—Under H.R. 4923, a 15-percent wage credit is available to employers for the first $10,000 of qualified wages paid to each employee who (1) is a resident of the renewal community, and (2) performs substantially all employment services within the renewal community in a trade or business of the employer. The wage credit rate applies to qualifying wages paid after June 30, 2001, and before January 1, 2010.

Wages that qualify for the credit are wages that are considered "qualified zone wages" for purposes of the empowerment zone wage credit (including coordination with the Work Opportunity Tax Credit). In general, any taxable business carrying out activities in the renewal community may claim the wage credit.

Commercial revitalization deduction.—H.R. 4923 allows each State to allocate up to $12 million of "commercial revitalization expenditures" to each renewal community located within the State for each calendar year after 2001 and before 2010 ($6 million for the period of July 1, 2001 through December 31, 2001). The appropriate State agency will make the allocations pursuant to a qualified allocation plan.

A "commercial revitalization expenditure" means the cost of a new building or the cost of substantially rehabilitating an existing building. The building must be used for commercial purposes and be located in a renewal community. In the case of the rehabilitation of an existing building, the cost of acquiring the building will be treated as qualifying expenditures only to the extent that such costs do not exceed 30 percent of the other rehabilitation expenditures. The qualifying expenditures for any building cannot exceed $10 million.

A taxpayer can elect either to (a) deduct one-half of the commercial revitalization expenditures for the taxable year the building is placed in service or (b) amortize all the expenditures ratably over the 120-month period beginning with the month the building is placed in service. No depreciation is allowed for amounts deducted under this provision. The adjusted basis is reduced by the amount of the commercial revitalization deduction, and the deduction is treated as a depreciation deduction in applying the depreciation recapture rules (e.g., sec. 1250).

The commercial revitalization deduction is treated in the same manner as the low-income housing credit in applying the passive loss rules (sec. 469). Thus, up to $25,000 of deductions (together with the other deductions and credits not subject to the passive loss limitation by reason of section 469(i)) are allowed to an individual taxpayer regardless of the taxpayer's adjusted gross income. The commercial revitalization deduction is allowed in computing a taxpayer's alternative minimum taxable income.

Additional section 179 expensing.—Under H.R. 4923, a renewal community business is allowed an additional $35,000 of section 179 expensing for qualified renewal property placed in service after June 30, 2001, and before January 1, 2010. The section 179 expensing allowed to a taxpayer is phased out by the amount by which 50 percent of the cost of qualified renewal property placed in service during the year by the taxpayer exceeds $200,000. The term "qualified renewal property" is similar to the definition of "qualified zone property" used in connection with empowerment zones.

Expensing of environmental remediation costs ("brownfields").—Under H.R. 4923, a renewal community is treated as a "targeted area" under section 198 (which permits the expensing of environmental remediation costs). Thus, taxpayers can elect to treat certain environmental remediation expenditures that otherwise would be capitalized as deductible in the year paid or incurred. This provision applies to expenditures incurred after June 30, 2001, and before January 1, 2010.

Extension of work opportunity tax credit ("WOTC").—H.R. 4923 expands the high-risk youth and qualified summer youth categories in the WOTC to include qualified individuals who live in a renewal community.

Effective date.—Renewal communities must be designated within 24 months after publication of regulations by HUD. The tax benefits available in renewal communities are effective for the period beginning July 1, 2001, and ending December 31, 2009.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision. However, S. 3152 authorizes the Secretaries of HUD and Agriculture to designate up to 30 renewal zones from areas nominated by States and local governments. At least six of the designated renewal zones must be in rural areas. The Secretary of HUD is required to publish (within four months after enactment) regulations describing the nomination and selection process. Designations of renewal zones must be made before January 1, 2002, and the designation are effective for the period beginning on January 1, 2002 through December 31, 2009.

The eligibility criteria (as well as the population and geographic limitations) are similar to those for renewal communities in the House bill, except that S. 3152 provides that any State without any empowerment zone would be given priority in the designation process. Also, the designations of renewal zones must result in (after taking into account existing empowerment zones) each State having at least one zone designation (empowerment or renewal zone). In addition, S. 3152 provides that, in lieu of the poverty, income, and unemployment criteria, outmigration may be taken into account in the designation of one rural renewal zone. Under a separate provision in S. 3152, the designation of the District of Columbia Enterprise Zone would be extended through December 31, 2006.

In order for an area to be designated as a renewal zone, State and local governments are required to submit a written course of action in which the State and local governments promise to take at least four of the governmental actions described in H.R. 4923. However, S. 3152 does not contain any of the economic growth provision requirements described in connection with renewal communities.

Tax incentives for renewal zones.—Under S. 3152, businesses in renewal zones would be eligible for the following tax incentives during the period beginning January 1, 2002 and ending December 31, 2009: (1) a zero-percent capital gains rate for qualifying assets limited to an aggregate amount not to exceed $25 million of gain per taxpayer;[6] (2) a 15-percent wage credit for the first $15,000 of qualifying wages; (3) $35,000 in additional 179 expensing for qualifying property; (4) and the enhanced tax-exempt bond rules that currently apply to businesses in the Round II empowerment zones.

GAO report.—The General Accounting Office will audit and report to Congress every three years (beginning on January 31, 2004) on the renewal zone program and its effect on poverty, unemployment, and economic growth within the designated renewal zones.

Effective date.—The 30 new renewal zones must be designated by January 1, 2002, and the resulting tax benefits are available for the period beginning January 1, 2002, and ending December 31, 2009.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the provisions of H.R. 4923 with certain modifications to the designation process for renewal communities. The conference agreement authorizes the designation of 40 renewal communities, of which at least 12 must be in rural areas. Of the 12 rural renewal communities, one shall be an area within Mississippi, designated by the State of Mississippi, that includes at least one census tract within Madison County, Mississippi.

The tax incentives are the same as those described in H.R. 4923—i.e., (1) a zero-percent capital gains rate for capital gain from the sale of qualifying assets held for more than five years; (2) a 15 percent wage credit to employers for the first $10,000 of qualified wages paid to qualifying employees; (3) a commercial revitalization expenditure; (4) an additional $35,000 of section 179 expensing for qualified renewal property; and (5) an expansion of the Work Opportunity Tax Credit with respect to qualified individuals who live in a renewal community.[7] The 40 renewal communities must be designated by January 1, 2002, and the resulting tax-benefits are available for the period beginning January 1, 2002, and ending December 31, 2009.[8]

The conference agreement provides that, with respect to the first 20 designations of nominated areas as renewal communities, preference will be given to nominated areas that are enterprise communities and empowerment zones under present law that otherwise meet the requirements for designation as a renewal community.

The conference agreement includes the priority designation with respect to the District of Columbia Enterprise Zone (as contained in H.R. 4923). The conference agreement also includes the provision from S. 3152 that, in lieu of the poverty, income, and unemployment criteria, outmigration may be taken into account in the designation of one rural renewal community.

The General Accounting Office will audit and report to Congress on January 31, 2004, and again in 2007 and 2010, on the renewal community program and its effect on poverty, unemployment, and economic growth within the designated renewal communities.

[5] An "enterprise zone business" is defined in section 1397B and is described in connection with the expansion of the empowerment zone benefits.

[6] Any gain attributable to the period before January 1, 2002, or after December 31, 2014, would not be eligible for the zero-percent capital gains rate.

[7] Under the conference agreement, renewal communities are not "targeted areas" for purposes of permitting expensing of certain environmental remediation costs. Another provision described below extends the brownfields provision for two years and eliminates the targeted area requirement.

[8] If a renewal community designation is terminated prior to December 31, 2009, the tax incentives would cease to be available as of the termination date.

Effective date.—The 40 renewal communities must be designated by January 1, 2002, and the resulting tax benefits will be available for the period beginning January 1, 2002, and ending December 31, 2009.

B. Empowerment Zone Tax Incentives

1. Extension and expansion of empowerment zones (secs. 611–615 of the bill and secs. 1391, 1394, 1396, and 1397A of the Code)

PRESENT LAW

Round I empowerment zones

The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1993 ("OBRA 1993") authorized the designation of nine empowerment zones ("Round I empowerment zones") to provide tax incentives for businesses to locate within targeted areas designated by the Secretaries of HUD and Agriculture. The Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 ("1997 Act") authorized the designation of two additional Round I urban empowerment zones.

Businesses in the 11 Round I empowerment zones qualify for the following tax incentives: (1) a 20-percent wage credit for the first $15,000 of wages paid to a zone resident who works in the empowerment zone,[9] (2) an additional $20,000 of section 179 expensing for qualifying zone property, and (3) tax-exempt financing for certain qualifying zone facilities.[10] The tax incentives with respect to the empowerment zones designated by OBRA 1993 generally are available during the 10-year period of 1995 through 2004. The tax incentives with respect to the two additional Round I empowerment zones generally are available during the 10-year period of 2000 through 2009.[11]

Round II empowerment zones

The 1997 Act also authorized the designation of 20 additional empowerment zones ("Round II empowerment zones"), of which 15 are located in urban areas and five are located in rural areas. Businesses in the Round II empowerment zones are not eligible for the wage credit, but are eligible to receive up to $20,000 of additional section 179 expensing. Businesses in the Round II empowerment zones also are eligible for more generous tax-exempt financing benefits than those available in the Round I empowerment zones. Specifically, the tax-exempt financing benefits for the Round II empowerment zones are not subject to the State private activity bond volume caps (but are subject to separate per-zone volume limitations), and the per-business size limitations that apply to the Round I empowerment zones and enterprise communities (i.e., $3 million for each qualified enterprise zone business with a maximum of $20 million for each principal user for all zones and communities) do not apply to qualifying bonds issued for Round II empowerment zones. The tax incentives with respect to the Round II empowerment zones generally are available during the 10-year period of 1999 through 2008.

HOUSE BILL

No provision. However, as described in greater detail below, H.R. 4923 conforms and enhances the tax incentives for the Round I and Round II empowerment zones and extends their designations through December 31, 2009. H.R. 4923 also authorizes the designation of nine new empowerment zones ("Round III empowerment zones").

Extension of tax incentives for Round I and Round II empowerment zones

The designation of empowerment zone status for Round I and II empowerment zones (other than the District of Columbia Enterprise Zone)[12] is extended through December 31, 2009. In addition, the 20-percent wage credit is made available in all Round I and II empowerment zones for qualifying wages paid or incurred after December 31, 2001. The credit rate remains at 20 percent (rather than being phased down) through December 31, 2009, in Round I and Round II empowerment zones.

In addition, $35,000 (rather than $20,000) of additional section 179 expensing is available for qualified zone property placed in service in taxable years beginning after December 31, 2001, by a qualified business in any of the empowerment zones.[13] Businesses in the D.C. Enterprise Zone are entitled to the additional section 179 expensing until the termination of the D.C. zone designation.[14] The bill also extends an empowerment zone's status as a "targeted area" under section 198 (thus permitting expensing of environmental remediation costs). The bill applies to expenses incurred after December 31, 2001, and before January 1, 2010.

Businesses located in Round I empowerment zones (other than the D.C. Enterprise Zone)[15] also are eligible for the more generous tax-exempt bond rules that apply under present law to businesses in the Round II empowerment zones (sec. 1394(f)). The bill applies to tax-exempt bonds issued after December 31, 2001. Bonds that have been issued by businesses in Round I zones before January 1, 2002, are not taken into account in applying the limitations on the amount of new empowerment zone facility bonds that can be issued under the bill.

Nine new empowerment zones

The Secretaries of HUD and Agriculture are authorized to designate nine additional empowerment zones ("Round III empowerment zones"). Seven of the Round III empowerment zones will be located in urban areas, and two will be located in rural areas.

The eligibility and selection criteria for the Round III empowerment zones are the same as the criteria that applied to the Round II empowerment zones. The Round III empowerment zones must be designated by January 1, 2002, and the tax incentives with respect to the Round III empowerment zones generally are available during the period beginning on January 1, 2002, and ending on December 31, 2009.

Businesses in the Round III empowerment zones are eligible for the same tax incentives that, under the bill, are available to Round I and Round II empowerment zones (i.e., a 20-percent wage credit, an additional $35,000 of section 179 expensing, and the enhanced tax-exempt financing benefits presently available to Round II empowerment zones). The Round III empowerment zones also are considered "targeted areas" for purposes of permitting expensing of certain environmental remediation costs under section 198.

Effective date

The extension of the existing empowerment zone designations is effective after the date of enactment. The extension of the tax benefits to existing empowerment zones (i.e., the expanded wage credit, the additional section 179 expensing, the brownfields designation, and the more generous tax-exempt bond rules) generally is effective after December 31, 2001.

The new Round III empowerment zones must be designated by January 1, 2002, and the tax incentives with respect to the Round III empowerment zones generally are available during the period beginning on January 1, 2002, and ending on December 31, 2009.

Senate Amendment

No provision. However, S. 3152 contains a provision that conforms and enhances incentives for existing empowerment zones. Specifically, the provision extends the designation of empowerment zone status for Round I and II empowerment zones through December 31, 2009. In addition, a 15-percent wage credit is made available in all Round I and II empowerment zones, effective in 2002 (except in the case of the two additional Round I empowerment zones added by the 1997 Act, for which the 15-percent wage credit takes effect in 2005 as scheduled under present law). For all the empowerment zones, the 15-percent wage credit expires on December 31, 2009.

In addition, $35,000 (rather than $20,000) of additional section 179 expensing is available for qualified zone property placed in service in taxable years beginning after December 31, 2001, by a qualified business in any of the empowerment zones.[16]

Under S. 3152, businesses located in Round I empowerment zones are eligible for the more generous tax-exempt bond rules that apply under present law to businesses in the Round II empowerment zones (sec. 1394(f)). The proposal applies to tax-exempt bonds issued after December 31, 2001. Bonds that have been issued by businesses in Round I zones before January 1, 2002, are not taken into account in applying the limitations on the amount of new empowerment zone facility bonds that can be issued under the provision.

Businesses located in any empowerment zone also qualify for a zero-percent capital gains rate for gain from the sale of a qualifying zone assets acquired after date of enactment and before January 1, 2010, and held for more than five years. Assets that qualify for this incentive are similar to the types of assets that qualify for the present-law zero percent capital gains rate for qualifying D.C. Zone assets. The zero-percent capital gains rate is limited to an aggregate amount not to exceed $25 million of gain per taxpayer. Gain attributable to the period before the date of enactment or after December 31, 2014, is not eligible for the zero-percent rate.

[9] For wages paid in calendar years during the period 1994 through 2001, the credit rate is 20 percent. The credit rate is reduced to 15 percent for calendar year 2002, 10 percent for calendar year 2003, and 5 percent for calendar year 2004. No wage credit is available after 2004 in the original nine empowerment zones.

[10] For purposes of these tax incentives, a qualifying business does not include a trade or business consisting predominantly of the development or holding of intangibles for sale or license (sec. 1397B(d)(4)). While the provision does not modify the definition of a qualifying business, the sponsors of the legislation intend to review this issue.

[11] Except for the wage credit, which is reduced to 15 percent for calendar year 2005, and then reduced by five percentage points in each year in 2006 and 2007, with no wage credit available after 2007.

[12] As previously discussed, under H.R. 4923, the District of Columbia Enterprise Zone is given a priority designation as a renewal community effective January 1, 2003.

[13] The additional $35,000 of section 179 expensing is available throughout all areas that are part of a designated empowerment zone, including the non-contiguous "developable sites" that were allowed to be part of the designated Round II empowerment zones under the 1997 Act.

[14] The D.C. Enterprise Zone is scheduled to terminate on December 31, 2002.

[15] The present-law rules of sections 1394 and 1400A continue to apply with respect to the D.C. Enterprise Zone through its scheduled expiration of December 31, 2002.

[16] The additional $35,000 of section 179 expensing is available throughout all areas that are part of a designated empowerment zone, including the non-contiguous "developable sites" that were allowed to be part of the designated Round II empowerment zones under the 1997 Act.

Effective date.—The extension of the existing empowerment zone designations is effective after the date of enactment. The additional section 179 expensing and the more generous tax-exempt bond rules for the existing empowerment zones is effective after December 31, 2001. The zero-percent capital gains rate applies to qualifying property purchased after the date of enactment. The 15-percent wage credit generally is effective for qualifying wages paid after December 31, 2001. With respect to the two additional Round I empowerment zones, however, the wage credit is effective for qualifying wages paid after December 31, 2004.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the provisions in H.R. 4923 with the following modifications. The conference agreement does not extend the empowerment zones' status as a "targeted area" for purposes of permitting expensing of certain environmental remediation costs under section 198.[17] In addition, the conference agreement provides that the General Accounting Office will audit and report to Congress on January 31, 2004, and again in 2007 and 2010, on the empowerment zone and enterprise community program and its effect on poverty, unemployment, and economic growth within the designated areas.

2. Rollover of gain from the sale of qualified empowerment zone investments (sec. 616 of the bill and new sec. 1397B of the Code)

PRESENT LAW

In general, gain or loss is recognized on any sale, exchange, or other disposition of property. A taxpayer (other than a corporation) may elect to roll over without payment of tax any capital gain realized upon the sale of qualified small business stock held for more than six months where the taxpayer uses the proceeds to purchase other qualified small business stock within 60 days of the sale of the original stock.

HOUSE BILL

No provision. However, under H.R. 4923, a taxpayer can elect to roll over capital gain from the sale or exchange of any qualified empowerment zone asset purchased after the date of enactment and held for more than one year ("original zone asset") where the taxpayer uses the proceeds to purchase other qualifying empowerment zone assets in the same zone ("replacement zone asset") within 60 days of the sale of the original zone asset. The holding period of the replacement zone asset includes the holding period of the original zone asset, except that the replacement asset must actually be held for more than one year to qualify for another tax-free rollover. The basis of the replacement zone asset is reduced by the gain not recognized on the rollover. However, if the replacement zone asset is qualified small business stock (as defined in sec. 1202), the exclusion under section 1202 would not apply to gain accrued on the original zone asset.[18] A "qualified empowerment zone asset" means an asset that would be a qualified community asset if the empowerment zone were a renewal community (and the asset is acquired after the date of enactment of the bill). Assets in the D.C. Enterprise Zone are not eligible for the tax-free rollover treatment.[19]

Effective date.—The provision is effective for qualifying assets purchased after the date of enactment.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the provision in H.R. 4923.

3. Increased exclusion of gain from the sale of qualifying empowerment zone stock (sec. 617 of the bill and sec. 1202 of the Code)

PRESENT LAW

Under present law, an individual, subject to limitations, may exclude 50 percent of the gain[20] from the sale of qualifying small business stock held more than five years (sec. 1202).

HOUSE BILL

No provision. However, H.R. 4923 includes a provision that would increase the exclusion for small business stock to 60 percent for stock purchased after the date of enactment in a corporation that is a qualified business entity and that is held for more than five years. A "qualified business entity" means a corporation that satisfies the requirements of a qualifying business under the empowerment zone rules during substantially all the taxpayer's holding period.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for qualified stock purchased after the date of enactment.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the provision in H.R. 4923.

C. New Markets Tax Credit (sec. 621 of the bill and new sec. 45D of the Code)

PRESENT LAW

Some tax incentives are available to taxpayers making investments and loans in low-income communities. For example, tax incentives are available to taxpayers that invest in specialized small business investment companies licensed by the Small Business Administration to make loans to, or equity investments in, small businesses owned by persons who are socially or economically disadvantaged.

HOUSE BILL

No provision. However, H.R. 4923 includes a provision that creates a new tax credit for qualified equity investments made to acquire stock in a selected community development entity ("CDE"). The maximum annual amount of qualifying equity investments is capped as follows:

Calendar Year	Maximum qualifying equity investment
2001	$1.0 billion
2002–2003	1.5 billion per year
2004–2005	2.0 billion per year
2006–2007	3.5 billion per year

The amount of the new tax credit to the investor (either the original purchaser or a subsequent holder) is (1) a five-percent credit for the year in which the equity interest is purchased from the CDE and the first two anniversary dates after the interest is purchased from the CDE, and (2) a six percent credit on each anniversary date thereafter for the following four years.[21] The taxpayer's basis in the investment is reduced by the amount of the credit (other than for purposes of calculating the capital gain exclusion under sections 1202, 1400B, and 1400F). The credit is subject to the general business credit rules.

A CDE is any domestic corporation or partnership (1) whose primary mission is serving or providing investment capital for low-income communities or low-income persons, (2) that maintains accountability to residents of low-income communities through representation on governing or advisory boards, or otherwise and (3) is certified by the Treasury Department as an eligible CDE.[22] No later than 60 days after enactment, the Treasury Department shall issue regulations that specify objective criteria to be used by the Treasury to allocate the credits among eligible CDEs. In allocating the credits, the Treasury Department will give priority to entities with records of having successfully provided capital or technical assistance to disadvantaged businesses or communities.

If a CDE fails to sell equity interests to investors up to the amount authorized within five years of the authorization, then the remaining authorization is canceled. The Treasury Department can authorize another CDE to issue equity interests for the unused portion. No authorization can be made after 2014.

A "qualified equity investment" is defined as stock or a similar equity interest acquired directly from a CDE in exchange for cash. Substantially all of the investment proceeds must be used by the CDE to make "qualified low-income community investments," meaning equity investments in, or loans to, qualified active businesses located in low-income communities, certain financial counseling and other services specified in regulations to businesses and residents in low-income communities.[23]

The stock or equity interest cannot be redeemed (or otherwise cashed out) by the CDE for at least seven years. If an entity fails to be a CDE during the seven-year period following the taxpayer's investment, or if the equity interest is redeemed by the issuing CDE during that seven-year period, then any credits claimed with respect to the equity interest are recaptured (with interest) and no further credits are allowed.

A "low-income community" is defined as census tracts with either (1) poverty rates of at least 20 percent (based on the most recent census data), or (2) median family income which does not exceed 80 percent of the greater of metropolitan area income or statewide median family income (for a non-metropolitan census tract, 80 percent of non-metropolitan statewide median family income).

A "qualified active business" is defined as a business which satisfies the following requirements: (1) at least 50 percent of the total gross income of the business is derived from the active conduct of trade or business activities in low-income communities; (2) a substantial portion of the use of the tangible property of such business is used within low-income communities; (3) a substantial portion of the services performed for such business by its employees is performed in low-income communities; and (4) less than 5 percent of the average aggregate of unadjusted bases of the property of such business is attributable to certain financial property or to collectibles (other than collectibles held for sale to customers). There is no requirement that employees of the business be residents of the low-income community.

[17] Another provision described below extends the brownfields provision for two years and eliminates the targeted area requirement.

[18] See section 1045 for rollover of qualified small business stock to other small business stock.

[19] However, a qualifying D.C. Zone asset held for more than five years is eligible for a 100-percent capital gains exclusion (sec. 1400B).

[20] The portion of the capital gain included in income is subject to a maximum regular tax rate of 28 percent, and 42 percent of the excluded gain is a minimum tax preference.

[21] Thus, a credit would be available on the date on which the investment is made and for each of the six anniversary dates thereafter.

[22] A specialized small business investment company and a community development financial institution are treated as satisfying the requirements for a CDE.

[23] If at least 85 percent of the aggregate gross assets of the CDE are invested (directly or indirectly) in equity interests in, or loans to, qualified active businesses located in low-income communities, then there would be no need to trace the use of the proceeds from the particular stock (or other equity ownership) issuance with respect to which the credit is claimed.

Rental of improved commercial real estate located in a low-income community is a qualified active business, regardless of the characteristics of the commercial tenants of the property. The purchase and holding of unimproved real estate is not a qualified active business. In addition, a qualified active business does not include (a) any business consisting predominantly of the development or holding of intangibles for sale or license; (b) operation of any facility described in sec. 144(c)(6)(B); or (c) any business if a significant equity interest in such business is held by a person who also holds a significant equity interest in the CDE. A qualified active business can include an organization that is organized on a non-profit basis.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for qualified investments made after December 31, 2000.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision. However, S. 3152 includes a provision that creates a new markets tax credit that is similar to the provision in H.R. 4923. Under S. 3152, the maximum annual amount of qualifying equity investments is capped as follows:

Calendar year	Maximum qualifying equity investment
2002	$1.0 billion
2003–2006	$1.5 billion per year

S. 3152 defines a CDE in the same manner as in H.R. 4923, except that the accountability requirement is clarified to provide that the CDE must maintain accountability to residents of low- income communities through the representation of the residents on governing or advisory boards of the CDE. No later than 120 days after enactment, the Treasury Department will issue guidance that specifies objective criteria to be used by the Treasury to allocate the credits among eligible CDEs. In allocating the credits, the Treasury Department will give priority to entities with records of having successfully provided capital or technical assistance to disadvantaged businesses or communities,[24] as well as to entities that intend to invest substantially all of the proceeds they receive from their investors in businesses in which persons unrelated to the CDE hold the majority equity interest.

Under S. 3152, if a CDE fails to sell equity interests to investors up to the amount authorized within five years of the authorization, then the remaining authorization is canceled. The Treasury Department can authorize another CDE to issue equity interests for the unused portion. No authorization can be made after 2013.

Substantially all of the investment proceeds must be used by the CDE to make "qualified low-income community investments." Qualified low-income community investments include: (1) capital or equity investments in, or loans to, qualified active businesses located in low- income communities,[25] (2) certain financial counseling and other services specified in regulations to businesses and residents in low-income communities, (3) the purchase from another CDE of any loan made by such entity that is a qualified low income community investment, or (4) an equity investment in, or loans to, another CDE.[26] Treasury Department regulations will provide guidance with respect to the "substantially all" standard.

The definition of a "low-income community" is the same as in H.R. 4923, except that under S. 3152, the Secretary may designate any area within any census tract as a "low income community" provided that (1) the boundary of the area is continuous,[27] (2) the area (if it were a census tract) would satisfy the poverty rate or median income requirements set forth above[28] within the targeted area, and (3) an inadequate access to investment capital exists in the area.

The definition of a "qualified active business" is the same as in H.R. 4923, except that S. 3152 clarifies that a qualified active business can include an organization that is organized on a non-profit basis.

The General Accounting Office will audit and report to Congress by January 31, 2004 (and again by January 31, 2007) on the new markets tax credit program, including on all qualified community development entities that receive an allocation under the new markets tax credit.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for qualified investments made after December 31, 2001.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows H.R. 4923 with some modifications.

The definition of a CDE includes the clarification in S. 3152 regarding the accountability requirement, as well as the priority allocation to CDEs with records of having successfully provided capital or technical assistance to disadvantaged businesses or communities,[29] as well as to entities that intend to invest substantially all of their investment proceeds in businesses in which persons unrelated to the CDE hold the majority equity interest.

The conference agreement adopts S. 3152's definitions of "qualified low-income community investment" (which permits investments in related businesses) and "low-income community" (which provides discretion to designate targeted population areas). In addition, the definition of a "qualified active business" includes an organization that is organized on a non-profit basis.

Under the conference agreement, the General Accounting Office will audit and report to Congress by January 31, 2004, and again in 2007 and 2010, on the new markets tax credit program, including on all qualified community development entities that receive an allocation under the new markets tax credit program.

D. INCREASE THE LOW-INCOME HOUSING TAX CREDIT CAP AND MAKE OTHER MODIFICATIONS (SECS. 631–637 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 42 OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

In general

The low-income housing tax credit may be claimed over a 10-year period for the cost of rental housing occupied by tenants having incomes below specified levels. The credit percentage for newly constructed or substantially rehabilitated housing that is not Federally subsidized is adjusted monthly by the Internal Revenue Service so that the 10 annual installments have a present value of 70 percent of the total qualified expenditures. The credit percentage for new substantially rehabilitated housing that is Federally subsidized and for existing housing that is substantially rehabilitated is calculated to have a present value of 30 percent qualified expenditures.

Credit cap

The aggregate credit authority provided annually to each State is $1.25 per resident, except in the case of projects that also receive financing with proceeds of tax-exempt bonds issued subject to the private activity bond volume limit and certain carry-over amounts.

Expenditure test

Generally, the building must be placed in service in the year in which it receives an allocation to qualify for the credit. An exception is provided in the case where the taxpayer has expended an amount equal to 10-percent or more of the taxpayer's reasonably expected basis in the building by the end of the calendar year in which the allocation is received and certain other requirements are met.

Basis of building eligible for the credit

Buildings receiving assistance under the HOME investment partnerships act ("HOME") are not eligible for the enhanced credit for buildings located in high cost areas (i.e., qualified census tracts and difficult development areas). Under the enhanced credit, the 70-percent and 30-percent credit are increased to a 91-percent and 39-percent credit, respectfully.

Eligible basis is generally limited to the portion of the building used by qualified low-income tenants for residential living and some common areas.

State allocation plans

Each State must develop a plan for allocating credits and such plan must include certain allocation criteria including: (1) project location; (2) housing needs characteristics; (3) project characteristics; (4) sponsor characteristics; (5) participation of local tax-exempts; (6) tenant populations with special needs; and (7) public housing waiting lists. The State allocation plan must also give preference to housing projects: (1) that serve the lowest income tenants; and (2) that are obligated to serve qualified tenants for the longest periods.

[24] A record of having successfully provided capital or technical assistance to disadvantaged businesses or communities could be demonstrated by the past actions of the CDE itself or an affiliate (e.g., in the case where a new CDE is established by a nonprofit organization with a history of providing assistance to disadvantaged communities).

[25] Thus, a qualified low-income community investment may include an investment in a qualifying business in which the CDE (or a related party) holds a significant interest. However, as previously mentioned, in allocating the credits among eligible CDEs, the Treasury Department will give priority to CDEs that intend to invest substantially all of the proceeds they receive from their investors in businesses in which persons unrelated to the CDE hold the majority of the equity interest. For purposes of this provision, persons are related to each other if they are described in sections 267(b) or 707(b)(1).

[26] If at least 85 percent of the aggregate gross assets of the CDE are invested (directly or indirectly) in equity interests in, or loans to, qualified active businesses located in low-income communities, then there would be no need to trace the use of the proceeds from the particular stock (or other equity ownership) issuance with respect to which the credit is claimed.

[27] It is intended that the continuous boundary that delineates the portion of the census tract as a "low-income community" should be a pre-existing boundary (such as an established neighborhood, political, or geographic boundary).

[28] A low-income community is defined as census tracts with either (1) poverty rates of at least 20 percent (based on the most recent census data), or (2) median family income which does not exceed 80 percent of the greater of metropolitan area income or statewide median family income (for a non-metropolitan census tract, 80 percent of non-metropolitan statewide median family income).

[29] A record of having successfully provided capital or technical assistance to disadvantaged businesses or communities could be demonstrated by the past actions of the CDE itself or an affiliate (e.g., in the case where a new CDE is established by a nonprofit organization with a history of providing assistance to disadvantaged communities).

Credit administration

There are no explicit requirements that housing credit agencies perform a comprehensive market study of the housing needs of the low-income individuals in the area to be served by the project, nor that such agency conduct site visits to monitor for compliance with habitability standards.

Stacking rule

Authority to allocate credits remains at the State (as opposed to local) government level unless State law provides otherwise.[30] Generally, credits may be allocated only from volume authority arising during the calendar year in which the building is placed in service, except in the case of: (1) credits claimed on additions to qualified basis; (2) credits allocated in a later year pursuant to an earlier binding commitment made no later than the year in which the building is placed in service; and (3) carryover allocations.

Each State annually receives low-income housing credit authority equal to $1.25 per State resident for allocation to qualified low-income projects.[31] In addition to this $1.25 per resident amount, each State's "housing credit ceiling" includes the following amounts: (1) the unused State housing credit ceiling (if any) of such State for the preceding calendar year;[32] (2) the amount of the State housing credit ceiling (if any) returned in the calendar year;[33] and (3) the amount of the national pool (if any) allocated to such State by the Treasury Department.

The national pool consists of States' unused housing credit carryovers. For each State, the unused housing credit carryover for a calendar year consists of the excess (if any) of the unused State housing credit ceiling for such year over the excess (if any) of the aggregate housing credit dollar amount allocated for such year over the sum of $1.25 per resident and the credit returns for such year. The amounts in the national pool are allocated only to a State which allocated its entire housing credit ceiling for the preceding calendar year, and requested a share in the national pool not later than May 1 of the calendar year. The national pool allocation to qualified States is made on a pro rata basis equivalent to the fraction that a State's population enjoys relative to the total population of all qualified States for that year.

The present-law stacking rule provides that a State is treated as using its annual allocation of credit authority ($1.25 per State resident) and any returns during the calendar year followed by any unused credits carried forward from the preceding year's credit ceiling and finally any applicable allocations from the National pool.

HOUSE BILL

Credit cap

No provision. However, H.R. 4923 increases the $1.25 per capita cap to $1.75 per capita. This increase is phased-in over six years. Also, beginning in 2001 the per capita cap for each State is modified so that small population State are given a minimum of $2 million of annual credit cap. Therefore the credit cap would be the greater of: $1.35 per capita or $2 million in calendar year 2001; $1.45 per capita or $2 million in calendar 2002; $1.55 per capita or $2 million in calendar year 2003; $1.65 per capita or $2 million in calendar year 2004; $1.70 per capita or $2 million in calendar year 2005; and $1.75 per capita or $2 million in calendar year 2006. The $1.75 per capita credit cap and $2 million amount are indexed for inflation beginning in 2007.

Expenditure test

The provisions of H.R. 4923 allow a building which receives an allocation in the second half of a calendar to qualify under the 10-percent test if the taxpayer expends an amount equal to 10-percent or more of the taxpayer's reasonably expected basis in the building within six months of receiving the allocation regardless of whether the 10-percent test is met by the end of the calendar year.

Basis of building eligible for the credit

The provisions of H.R. 4923 make three changes to the basis rules of the credit. First, the definition of qualified census tracts for purposes of the enhanced credit is expanded to include any census tracts with a poverty rate of 25 percent or more. Second, H.R. 4923 extends the credit to a portion of the building used as a community service facility not in excess of 10 percent of the total eligible basis in the building. A community service facility is defined as any facility designed to serve primarily individuals whose income is 60 percent or less of area median income. Third, H.R. 4923 provides that assistance received under the Native American Housing Assistance and Self-Determination Act of 1996 is not taken into account in determining whether a building is Federally subsidized for purposes of the credit. This allows such buildings to qualify for something other than the 30-percent credit generally applicable to Federally subsidized buildings.

State allocation plans

The provisions of H.R. 4923 strikes the plan criteria relating to participation of local tax- exempts, replacing it with two other criteria: tenant populations of individuals with children and projects intended for eventual tenant ownership. It also provides that the present-law criteria relating to sponsor characteristics include whether the project involves the use of existing housing as part of a community revitalization plan. Also, H.R. 4923 adds a third category of housing projects to the preferential list. That third category is for projects located in qualified census tracts which contribute to a concerted community revitalization plan.

Credit administration

The provisions of H.R. 4923 require a comprehensive market study of the housing needs of the low-income individuals in the area to be served by the project and a written explanation available to the general public for any allocation not made in accordance with the established priorities and selection criteria of the housing credit agency. They also require site inspections by the housing credit agency to monitor compliance with habitability standards applicable to the project.

Stacking rule

The provisions of H.R. 4923 modify the stacking rule so that each State would be treated as using its allocation of the unused State housing credit ceiling (if any) from the preceding calendar before the current year's allocation of credit (including any credits returned to the State) and then finally any National pool allocations.

Effective date

In general, H.R. 4923 is effective for calendar years beginning after December 31, 2000, and buildings placed-in-service after such date in the case of projects that also receive financing with proceeds of tax-exempt bonds subject to the private activity bond volume limit which are issued after such date. The increase and indexing of the credit cap is effective for calendar years after December 31, 2000.

SENATE AMENDMENT

Credit cap

No provision. However, S. 3152 increases the annual State credit caps from $1.25 to $1.75 per resident beginning in 2001. Also, beginning in 2001 the per capita cap for each State is modified so that small population State are given a minimum of $2 million of annual credit cap. The $1.75 per capita cap and the $2 million amount are indexed for inflation beginning in calendar 2002.

Expenditure test

No provision.

Basis of building eligible for the credit

The provision in S. 3152 relating to the treatment of buildings receiving assistance under the Native American Housing Assistance and Self-Determination Act of 1996 is the same as one of the provisions in H.R. 4923. The other provisions in H.R. 4923 relating to the basis of building eligible for the credit are not part of S. 3152.

State allocation plans

No provision.

Credit administration

No provision.

Stacking rule

The provision of H.R. 4923 is included in S. 3152.

Effective date

The provisions are effective for calendar years beginning after December 31, 2000 and buildings placed-in-service after such date in the case of projects that also receive financing with proceeds of tax-exempt bonds which are issued after such date subject to the private activity bond volume limit.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

Credit cap

The conference agreement follows the provisions of H.R. 4923 and S. 3152 with a modification increasing the per-capita low-income housing credit cap from $1.25 per capita to $1.50 per capita in calendar year 2001 and to $1.75 per capita in calendar year 2002. Beginning in calendar year 2003, the per-capita portion of the credit cap will be adjusted annually for inflation. For small States, a minimum annual cap of $2 million is provided for calendar years 2001 and 2002. Beginning in calendar year 2003, the small State minimum is adjusted for inflation.

[30] For example, constitutional home rule cities in Illinois are guaranteed their proportionate share of the $1.25 amount, based on their population relative to that of the State as a whole.

[31] A State's population, for these purposes, is the most recent estimate of the State's population released by the Bureau of the Census before the beginning of the year to which the limitation applies. Also, for these purposes, the District of Columbia and the U.S. possessions (i.e., Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, the Northern Marianas and American Samoa) are treated as States.

[32] The unused State housing credit ceiling is the amount (if positive) of the previous year's annual credit limitation plus credit returns less the credit actually allocated in that year.

[33] Credit returns are the sum of any amounts allocated to projects within a State which fail to become a qualified low-income housing project within the allowable time period plus any amounts allocated to a project within a State under an allocation which is canceled by mutual consent of the housing credit agency and the allocation recipient.

Expenditure test

The conference agreement follows the provision of H.R. 4923.

Basis of building eligible for the credit

The conference agreement includes all three of the changes to the credit basis rules included in H.R. 4923.

State allocation plans

The conference agreement includes the provision of H.R. 4923.

Credit administration

The conference agreement includes the provision of H.R. 4923.

Stacking rule

The conference agreement follows the provisions of H.R. 4923 and the S. 3152.

Effective date

The provision is generally effective for calendar years beginning after December 31, 2000, and buildings placed-in-service after such date in the case of projects that also receive financing with proceeds of tax-exempt bonds subject to the private activity bond volume limit which are issued after such date.

E. ACCELERATE SCHEDULED INCREASE IN STATE VOLUME LIMITS ON TAX-EXEMPT PRIVATE ACTIVITY BONDS (SEC. 651 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 146 OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

Interest on bonds issued by States and local governments is excluded from income if the proceeds of the bonds are used to finance activities conducted and paid for by the governmental units (sec. 103). Interest on bonds issued by these governmental units to finance activities carried out and paid for by private persons ("private activity bonds") is taxable unless the activities are specified in the Internal Revenue Code. Private activity bonds on which interest may be tax-exempt include bonds for privately operated transportation facilities (airports, docks and wharves, mass transit, and high speed rail facilities), privately owned and/or provided municipal services (water, sewer, solid waste disposal, and certain electric and heating facilities), economic development (small manufacturing facilities and redevelopment in economically depressed areas), and certain social programs (low-income rental housing, qualified mortgage bonds, student loan bonds, and exempt activities of charitable organizations described in sec. 501(c)(3)).

The volume of tax-exempt private activity bonds that States and local governments may issue for most of these purposes in each calendar year is limited by State-wide volume limits. The current annual volume limits are $50 per resident of the State or $150 million if greater. The volume limits do not apply to private activity bonds to finance airports, docks and wharves, certain governmentally owned, but privately operated solid waste disposal facilities, certain high speed rail facilities, and to certain types of private activity tax-exempt bonds that are subject to other limits on their volume (qualified veterans' mortgage bonds and certain "new" empowerment zone and enterprise community bonds).

The current annual volume limits that apply to private activity tax-exempt bonds increase to $75 per resident of each State or $225 million, if greater, beginning in calendar year 2007. The increase is, ratably phased in, beginning with $55 per capita or $165 million, if greater, in calendar year 2003.

HOUSE BILL

No provision. However, H.R. 4923 accelerates the scheduled increase in the present-law annual State private activity bond volume limits to $75 per resident of each State, or $225 million (if greater) beginning in calendar year 2007. The increase is phased in as follows, beginning in calendar year 2001:

Calendar year	Volume limit
2001	$55 per resident ($165 million if greater)
2002	$60 per resident ($180 million if greater)
2003	$65 per resident ($195 million if greater)
2004, 2005, and 2006.	$70 per resident ($210 million if greater)
2007 and thereafter.	$75 per resident ($225 million if greater)

Effective date.—The provision is effective beginning in calendar year 2001 and is fully effective in calendar year 2007 and thereafter.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision. However, S. 3152 increases the present-law annual State private activity bond volume limits to $75 per resident of each State or $225 million (if greater) beginning in calendar year 2001. In addition, the $75 per resident and the $225 million State limit will be indexed for inflation beginning in calendar year 2002.

Effective date.—The provisions are effective in calender years beginning after December 31, 2000.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the provisions of H.R. 4923 and S. 3152 with a modification increasing the State volume limits from the greater of $50 per resident or $150 million to the greater of $62.50 per resident or $187.5 million in calendar year 2001. The volume limit will increase further, to the greater of $75 per resident or $225 million in calendar year 2002. Beginning in calendar year 2003, the volume limit will be adjusted annually for inflation.

F. EXTENSION AND MODIFICATION TO EXPENSING OF ENVIRONMENTAL REMEDIATION COSTS (SEC. 652 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 198 OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

Taxpayers can elect to treat certain environmental remediation expenditures that would otherwise be chargeable to capital account as deductible in the year paid or incurred (sec. 198). The deduction applies for both regular and alternative minimum tax purposes. The expenditure must be incurred in connection with the abatement or control of hazardous substances at a qualified contaminated site.

A "qualified contaminated site" generally is any property that (1) is held for use in a trade or business, for the production of income, or as inventory; (2) is certified by the appropriate State environmental agency to be located within a targeted area; and (3) contains (or potentially contains) a hazardous substance (so-called "brownfields"). Targeted areas are defined as: (1) empowerment zones and enterprise communities as designated under present law; (2) sites announced before February 1997, as being subject to one of the 76 Environmental Protection Agency ("EPA") Brownfields Pilots; (3) any population census tract with a poverty rate of 20 percent or more; and (4) certain industrial and commercial areas that are adjacent to tracts described in (3) above. However, sites that are identified on the national priorities list under the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 cannot qualify as targeted areas.

Eligible expenditures are those paid or incurred before January 1, 2002.

HOUSE BILL

No provision. However, H.R. 4923 as passed by the House extends an empowerment zone's status as a "targeted area" under section 198. In addition, H.R. 4923 provides that renewal communities (as defined in H.R. 4923) also constitute a "targeted area" under section 198.[14]

Effective date.—The provision is effective for expenditures incurred after June 30, 2001, and before January 1, 2010.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision. However, S. 3152 extends the expiration date for eligible expenditures to include those paid or incurred before January 1, 2004.

In addition, S. 3152 eliminates the targeted area requirement, thereby, expanding eligible sites to include any site containing (or potentially containing) a hazardous substance that is certified by the appropriate State environmental agency. However, expenditures undertaken at sites that are identified on the national priorities list under the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 would continue to not qualify as eligible expenditures.

Effective date.—The provision to extend the expiration date is effective upon the date of enactment. The provision to expand the class of eligible sites is effective for expenditures paid or incurred after the date of enactment.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows S. 3152. By extending and expanding section 198, the conferees do not intend to displace the general tax law principle regarding expensing versus capitalization of expenditures which continues to apply to environmental remediation efforts not specifically covered under section 198.

G. EXTENSION OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA HOMEBUYER TAX CREDIT (SEC. 653 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 1400C OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

First-time homebuyers of a principal residence in the District of Columbia are eligible for a nonrefundable tax credit of up to $5,000 of the amount of the purchase price. The $5,000 maximum credit applies both to individuals and married couples. Married individuals filing separately can claim a maximum credit of $2,500 each. The credit phases out for individual taxpayers with adjusted gross income between $70,000 and $90,000 ($110,000-$130,000 for joint filers). For purposes of eligibility, "first-time homebuyer" means any individual if such individual did not have a present ownership interest in a principal residence in the District of Columbia in the one year period ending on the date of the purchase of the residence to which the credit applies. The credit is scheduled to expire for residences purchased after December 31, 2001.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision. However, S. 3152 includes a provision that extends the first-time homebuyer credit for two years, through December 31, 2003. The provision also extends the phase-out range for married individuals filing a joint return so that it is twice that of individuals. Thus, under the provision, the District of Columbia homebuyer credit is phased out for joint filers with adjusted gross income between $140,000 and $180,000.

---

[14] Also see provisions above relating to empowerment zones and renewal communities.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the provision in S. 3152 with respect to the extension of the first-time homebuyer credit for two years (through December 31, 2003). The conference agreement does not include the provision regarding the phase-out range.

TITLE VII. ADMINISTRATIVE, MISCELLANEOUS, AND TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS PROVISIONS

Subtitle A. Administrative Provisions

A. Exempt Certain Reports From Elimination Under the Federal Reports Elimination and Sunset Act of 1995 (sec. 701 of the bill)

PRESENT LAW

Section 303 of the Federal Reports Elimination and Sunset Act of 1995 eliminates many periodic Federal reporting requirements, effective May 15, 2000.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement exempts certain reports from elimination and sunset pursuant to the Federal Reports Elimination and Sunset Act of 1995.

B. Extension of Deadlines for IRS Compliance With Certain Notice Requirements (sec. 702 of the bill, secs. 6631 and 6751(a) of the Code)

PRESENT LAW

The Internal Revenue Service Restructuring and Reform Act of 1998 ("IRS Restructuring Act of 1998") imposed several notice requirements relating to penalties, interest and installment agreements. Section 6715 of the Code, added by section 3306 of the IRS Restructuring Act of 1998, requires that each notice imposing a penalty include the name of the penalty, the Code section under which the penalty is imposed, and a computation of the penalty.[35] This requirement applies to notices issued, and penalties assessed after December 31, 2000.[36]

Section 6631 of the Code, added by section 3308 of the IRS Restructuring Act of 1998, requires that every IRS notice sent to an individual taxpayer that includes an amount of interest required to be paid by the taxpayer also include a detailed computation of the interest charged and a citation to the Code section under which such interest is imposed. The provision is effective for notices issued after December 31, 2000.

Section 3506 of the IRS Restructuring Act of 1998 requires the IRS to send every taxpayer in an installment agreement an annual statement of the initial balance owed, the payments made during the year, and the remaining balance. The provision became effective on July 1, 2000.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

It is the understanding of the conferees that due to the need for substantial systems modifications, and Year 2000 programming priorities, the IRS will be unable to fully comply with certain notice requirements in accordance with deadlines imposed by the IRS Restructuring Act of 1998. The conference agreement extends the deadlines for complying with the penalty, interest, and installment agreement notice requirements. Specifically, the annual installment agreement notice requirement is extended from July 1, 2000, to September 1, 2001. The deadlines for complying with the notice requirements relating to the computation of penalties and interest[17] are both extended to June 30, 2001. In addition, for penalty notices issued after June 30, 2001, and before July 1, 2003, the notice requirements will be treated as met if the notice contains a telephone number at which the taxpayer can request a copy of the taxpayer's assessment and payment history with respect to such penalty. Similarly, for interest notices issued after June 30, 2001, and before July 1, 2003, the notice requirements will be treated as met if such notice contains a telephone number at which the taxpayer can request a copy of the taxpayer's payment history relating to interest amounts included in such notice.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

C. Extension of Authority for Undercover Operations (sec. 703 of the bill and sec. 7608 of the Code)

PRESENT LAW

The Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 exempted IRS undercover operations from the otherwise applicable statutory restrictions controlling the use of Government funds (which generally provide that all receipts must be deposited in the general fund of the Treasury and all expenses be paid out of appropriated funds). In general, the exemption permits the IRS to "churn" the income earned by an undercover operation to pay additional expenses incurred in the undercover operation. The IRS is required to conduct a detailed financial audit of large undercover operations in which the IRS is churning funds and to provide an annual audit report to the Congress on all such large undercover operations. The exemption originally expired on December 31, 1989, and was extended by the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1990 to December 31, 1991. In the Taxpayer Bill of Rights II (Public Law 104–168), the authority to churn funds from undercover operations was extended for five years, through 2000.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement extends the authority of the IRS to "churn" the income earned from undercover operations for an additional five years, through 2005.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

D. Competent Authority and Pre-filing Agreements (sec. 704 of the bill and secs. 6103, 6110, and new sec. 6105 of the Code)

PRESENT LAW

Section 6103

Section 6103 of the Code sets forth the general rule that returns and return information are confidential. A return is any tax return, information return, declaration of estimated tax, or claim for refund filed under the Code on behalf of or with respect to any person. The term return also includes any amendment or supplement, including supporting schedules or attachments or lists, which are supplemental to or are part of a filed return. Return information is defined broadly. It includes the following information:

A taxpayer's identity, the nature, source or amount of income, payments, receipts, deductions, exemptions, credits, assets, liabilities, net worth, tax liability, tax withheld, deficiencies, overassessments, or tax payments;

Whether the taxpayer's return was, is being, or will be examined or subject to other investigation or processing;

Any other data, received by, recorded by, prepared by, furnished to, or collected by the Secretary with respect to a return or with respect to the determination of the existence, or possible existence, of liability (or the amount thereof) of any person under this title for any tax, penalty, interest, fine, forfeiture, or other imposition, or offense;[38]

Any part of any written determination or any background file document relating to such written determination which is not open to public inspection under section 6110;[39] and

Any advance pricing agreement entered into by a taxpayer and the Secretary and any background information related to the agreement or any application for an advance pricing agreement.

The term "return information" does not include data in a form that cannot be associated with or otherwise identify, directly or indirectly, a particular taxpayer.

Secrecy of information exchanged under tax treaties

U.S. tax treaties typically contain articles governing the exchange of information. These articles generally provide for the exchange of information between the tax authorities of the two countries when such information is necessary for carrying out provisions of the treaty or of the countries' domestic tax laws. Individuals referred to as "competent authorities" are designated by each country to make written requests for information and to receive information.[40]

The exchange of information articles typically cover information relating to taxes to which the treaty applies, but can also apply to other taxes (e.g., excise taxes) not covered by the treaty. Many of the treaties permit the exchange of information even if the taxpayer involved is not a resident of one of the treaty countries. The exchange of information articles may be similar to, or represent a variation on, Article 26 of the 1996 U.S. model income tax treaty.

Information that is received under the exchange of information articles is subject to secrecy clauses contained in the treaties. In this regard, the country requesting information under the treaties typically is required to treat any information received as secret in the same manner as information obtained under its domestic laws. In general, disclosure is not permitted other than to persons or authorities involved in the administration, assessment, collection or enforcement of taxes to which the treaty applies. For example, disclosure generally can be made to legislative bodies, such as the tax-writing committees of the Congress, and the General Accounting Office for purposes of overseeing the administration of U.S. tax laws.

[40] The U.S. competent authority is the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate. The U.S. competent authority function has been delegated to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who has redelegated the authority to the Director, International. On interpretive issues, the latter acts with the concurrence of the Associate Chief Counsel (International) of the IRS.

In addition to the exchange of information articles in U.S. tax treaties, exchange of information provisions are contained in tax information exchange agreements entered into between the United States and another country.[41] In addition, information may be exchanged pursuant to the Convention on Mutual Administrative Assistance in Tax Matters developed by the Council of Europe and the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (the "Multilateral Mutual Assistance Convention"), which limits the use of exchanged information and permits disclosure of such information only with the prior authorization of the competent authority of the country providing the information.[42] The United States has also entered into a number of implementation and coordination agreements with possessions that provide for the exchange of tax information. Moreover, the United States has entered into various mutual legal assistance treaties with other countries, some of which can be used to obtain tax information in criminal investigations.

Both the confidentiality provisions of section 6103, as well as treaty secrecy provisions can cover return information.

Section 6110 and section 7121

Section 6110 of the Code provides for disclosure of written determinations. With certain exceptions, section 6110 makes the text of any written determination the Internal Revenue Service ("IRS") issues available for public inspection. A written determination is any ruling, determination letter, technical advice memorandum, or Chief Counsel advice. The IRS is required to redact certain material before making these documents publicly available.[43] Among the information to be redacted is information specifically exempted from disclosure by any statute (other than Title 26) that is applicable to the IRS. Once the IRS makes the written determination publicly available, the background file documents associated with such written determination are available for public inspection upon written request. Section 6110 defines "background file documents" as any written material submitted by the taxpayer or other requester in support of the request. Background file documents also include any communications between the IRS and persons outside the IRS concerning such written determination that occur before the IRS issues the determination.

(1) the names, addresses, and other identifying details of the person to whom the written determination pertains and of any other person, other than a person with respect to whom a notation is made under subsection (d)(1) (relating to third party contacts), identified in the written determination or any background file document;

(2) information specifically authorized under criteria established by an Executive order to be kept secret in the interest of national defense or foreign policy, and which is in fact properly classified pursuant to such Executive order;

(3) information specifically exempted from disclosure by any statute (other than [Title 26]) which is applicable to the Internal Revenue Service;

(4) trade secrets and commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential;

(5) information the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy;

(6) information contained in or related to examination, operating, or condition reports prepared by, or on behalf of, or for use of an agency responsible for the regulation or supervision of financial institutions; and (7) geological and geophysical information and data, including maps, concerning wells.

For Chief Counsel Advice, paragraphs 2 through 7 do not apply, however, material may be deleted in accordance with subsections (b) and (c) of the FOIA (except that in applying Exemption 3 of the FOIA, no statutory provision of the Code is to be taken into account.) See sec. 6110(i)(3).

Section 6110 was added to the Code in 1976. The legislative history provided that a written determination would not be considered a ruling, technical advice memorandum, or determination letter, unless the document satisfies three criteria:

(1) The document recites the relevant facts;

(2) The document explains the applicable provisions of law; and

(3) The document shows the application of law to the facts.[44]

The legislative history further provided that section 6110 " does not require public disclosure of a closing agreement entered into between the IRS and a taxpayer which finally determines the taxpayer's tax liability with respect to a taxable year'Your committee understands that a closing agreement is generally the result of a negotiated settlement and, as such, does not necessarily represent the IRS view of the law. Your committee intends, however, that the closing agreement exception is not to be used as a means of avoiding public disclosure of determinations which, under present practice, would be issued in a form which would be open to public inspection [under the bill]."[45]

Closing agreements are entered into under the authority of section 7121. Closing agreements finally and conclusively settle a tax issue between the IRS and a taxpayer. Closing agreements may: (1) determine a taxpayer's entire tax liability for a previous tax period; or (2) fix the tax treatment of one or more specific items affecting tax liability for any tax period. Thus, closing agreements may settle the treatment of a specific item for periods ending after the execution of the agreement. A single closing agreement may cover both the determination of a taxpayer's entire tax liability for a previous tax period and fix the tax treatment of specific items for any tax period.

Freedom of Information Act

The Freedom of Information Act ("FOIA"), enacted in 1966, established a statutory right to access government information. While the purpose of section 6103 is to restrict access to returns and return information, the basic purpose of the FOIA is to ensure that the public has access to government documents. In general, the FOIA provides that any person has a right of access to Federal agency records, except to the extent that such records (or portions thereof) are protected from disclosure by one of nine exemptions or by one of three special law enforcement record exclusions. Exemption 3 of the FOIA allows the withholding of information prohibited from disclosure by another statute if certain requirements are met.[46] The right of access is enforceable in court.

Pending FOIA requests and litigation involving IRS records

Records covered by treaty secrecy clauses

A publisher of tax related material and commentary has made a FOIA request for the disclosure of competent authority agreements. The request has been pending since March 14, 2000.[47] The IRS has not denied the request, nor has it produced any documents responsive to the request. At this time, no suit has been filed to compel disclosure of these documents, although such a suit may be brought in the future.

In connection with a separate request, the IRS was sued under the FOIA to compel disclosure of Field Service Advice memoranda ("FSAs").[48] FSAs are prepared by attorneys in the IRS National Office of the Office of Chief Counsel. They are prepared in response to requests from IRS field personnel for legal guidance, usually with respect to issues relating to a particular taxpayer. FSAs usually contain a statement of issues, facts, legal analysis and conclusions. The primary purpose of FSAs is to ensure that IRS field personnel apply the law correctly and uniformly. The D.C. Circuit determined that FSAs are subject to disclosure. However, the court remanded the case to district court to address assertions of privilege, including those based on treaty secrecy. A decision on this issue by the district court is still pending.[49]

Pre-filing agreements

On February 11, 2000, the IRS issued Notice 2000-12, in which the IRS established a pilot program for "Pre-filing Agreements." Under this program, large businesses may request a review and resolution of specific issues relating to tax returns they expect to file between September and December of 2000. The purpose of the program is to enable taxpayers and the IRS to resolve issues that are likely to be disputed in post-filing audits. Examples of such issues include: (1) asset valuation and the allocation of a business's purchase or sale price among the assets acquired or sold; (2) the identification and documentation of hedging transactions; and (3) the determination of "market" for taxpayers using the lower of cost or market method of inventory valuation in situations involving inactive markets. The program is intended to address issues for which the law is settled.

[41] Sections 274(h)(6)(C) and 927(e)(3) specifically provide the Secretary of the Treasury the authority to enter into tax information exchange agreements. This eliminates the need for Senate ratification, which is required for a tax treaty. In addition, all tax information exchange agreements are required to include specific non-disclosure provisions which provide that "information received by either country will be disclosed only to persons or authorities (including courts and administrative bodies) involved in the administration or oversight of, or in the determination of appeals in respect of, taxes of the United States, or the beneficiary country and will be used by such persons or authorities only for such purposes."

Sec. 274(h)(6)(C)(i).

[42] The U.S. Senate ratified the Multilateral Mutual Assistance Convention, subject to certain reservations, in September 1990. The Multilateral Mutual Assistance Convention entered into force on April 1, 1995, and has been signed by the following countries: Denmark, Finland, Iceland, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, and the United States.

[43] For rulings, determination letters and technical advice memoranda, section 6110(c) provides the following exemptions from disclosure:

[47] The initial FOIA request of March 14, 2000, covered all competent authority agreements executed for the United States from January 1, 1990, to date. In response to a request from the Department of Treasury, by letter dated April 17, 2000, the FOIA request was narrowed to cover competent authority agreements executed between 1997 and 1999. The right to pursue the 1990 through 1996 agreements, however, was reserved.

In Notice 2000–12, the IRS stated that pre-filing agreements are closing agreements entered into pursuant to section 7121. As such, the notice provides that the information generated or received by the IRS during the pre-filing agreement process constitutes return information. The notice further provides that pre-filing agreements are not written determinations as defined in section 6110, nor are they subject to disclosure under the FOIA.

Several pre-filing agreements have been completed. A FOIA request for these agreements has not been made.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The provision affirms that closing and similar agreements, and information exchanged and agreements reached pursuant to a tax treaty, are confidential. Further, the provision clarifies that such protected documents are not to be disclosed under the FOIA or section 6110.

Clarification that return information includes closing agreements and similar dispute resolution agreements

Protection for closing agreements, pre-filing agreements and similar agreements not containing an exposition of the tax law

The bill provides that agreements entered into under section 7121 or similar agreements are confidential return information. Similar agreements are intended to include negotiated agreements that (1) are the result of an alternative dispute resolution or dispute avoidance process relating to liability of any person under the Code for any tax, penalty, interest, fine or forfeiture or other imposition or offense and (2) do not establish, set forth, or resolve the government's interpretation of the relevant tax law. This is not meant to preclude citation, or repetition of, the Code, Treasury regulations, or other published rules.

It is intended that pre-filing agreements be covered by this provision. It is the understanding of the conferees that pre-filing agreements do not explain the applicable provisions of law or otherwise contain any exposition of the tax law or the position of the IRS. In addition, it is not intended that the closing and similar agreement exception be used as a means of avoiding public disclosure of determinations that, under present law, would be issued in a form that would be open to public inspection. Thus, technical advice memoranda, chief counsel advice or other material clearly available to the public under present law section 6110, would not be exempt from disclosure by virtue of the fact that such material is contained in a background file for a closing agreement. For example, if a revenue agent seeks technical advice in connection with a pre-filing agreement, such technical advice would remain subject to the requirements of section 6110. Since the pre-filing agreement program involves only settled issues of law, it is the understanding of the conferees that documents of this nature generally would not be generated in the pre-filing agreement process.

The provision is not intended to foreclose the disclosure of tax-exempt organization closing agreements to the extent such disclosure is authorized under section 6104.[50] Since section 6103 permits the disclosure of return information as authorized by Title 26, a disclosure authorized by section 6104 is permissible, notwithstanding the fact that a closing agreement is return information.

Report on pre-filing agreement program

It is intended that the Secretary make publicly available an annual report relating to the pe-filing agreement program operations for the preceding calendar year. The annual reporting requirement is for five years, or the duration of the program, whichever is shorter. The report is to include (1) the number of pre-filing agreements completed, (2) the number of applications received, (3) the number of applications withdrawn, (4) the types of issues which are resolved by completed agreements, (5) whether the program is being utilized by taxpayers who were previously subject to audit by the IRS, (6) the average length of time required to complete an agreement, (7) the number, if any, and subject of technical advice and chief counsel advice memoranda issued to address issues arising in connection with any pre-filing agreement, (8) any model agreements,[51] and (9) any other information the Secretary deems appropriate. The first report, covering the calendar year 2000, is to be issued no later than March 30, 2001. The information required for the annual report is subject to the restrictions of section 6103. Therefore, the Secretary will disclose information only in a form that cannot be associated with or otherwise identify, directly or indirectly, a particular taxpayer. The Joint Committee on Taxation periodically may review pre-filing agreements to determine whether they contain legal interpretations that should be disclosed to the public.

Clarification that information protected by treaty is confidential

Protection for agreements and information exchanged pursuant to tax treaty

The provision adds a new Code section 6105, which provides that tax convention information, with limited exceptions, cannot be disclosed. Thus, the provision confirms that agreements concluded under, and information received pursuant to, a tax convention are confidential and can only be disclosed as provided in such tax convention.

Under the provision, a tax convention is defined to include any income tax or gift and estate tax convention, or any other convention or bilateral agreement (including multilateral conventions and agreements and any agreement with a possession of the United States) providing for the avoidance of double taxation, the prevention of fiscal evasion, nondiscrimination with respect to taxes, the exchange of tax relevant information with the United States, or mutual assistance in tax matters.

It is the understanding of the conferees that competent authority agreements (also referred to as mutual agreements) generally do not contain an explanation of the law or application of law to facts. Instead, such agreements are negotiated arrangements to resolve issues of double taxation. Thus, the term tax convention information for purposes of the provision includes: (1) any agreement entered into with the competent authority of one or more foreign governments pursuant to a tax convention; (2) an application for relief under a tax convention (sought by either a taxpayer or another competent authority); (3) any background information related to such agreement or application; (4) documents implementing such agreement; and (5) any other information exchanged pursuant to a tax convention that is treated as confidential or secret under such tax convention. The conferees intend that tax convention information would include documents and any other information that reflects tax convention information, including the association of a particular treaty partner with a specific issue or matter.

The general rule that tax convention information cannot be disclosed does not apply to the disclosure of tax convention information to persons or authorities (including courts and administrative bodies) that are entitled to disclosure under the tax convention. It also does not apply to any generally applicable procedural rules regarding applications for relief under a tax convention. This exception is intended to ensure that there is no restriction on the release by the Secretary of publicly available procedural rules concerning matters such as how or when to make a request for competent authority assistance. Thus, certain material generated by IRS, i.e., its Competent Authority procedures (primarily reflected in Rev. Proc. 96–13), or similar material produced by a treaty partner (for example, an Information Circular produced and published by the Canadian tax authority) may be made available to the public. The general rule does not apply to the disclosure of information not relating to a particular taxpayer if, after consultation with the parties to a tax convention, the Secretary determines that such disclosure would not impair tax administration. This is consistent with current practice. An example of a general agreement that could be disclosed under this provision is the agreement between the competent authorities of Mexico and the United States regarding the maquiladora industry. That agreement, which was not taxpayer specific, was publicized by press release IR–INT–1999–13. The conferees intend that the "impairment of tax administration" for purposes of this provision include, but not be limited to, the release of documents that would adversely affect the working relationship of the treaty partners. Under the provision, except as otherwise provided, taxpayer- specific tax convention information could not be publicly disclosed, even if it would not impair tax administration.

A taxpayer-specific competent authority agreement that relates to the existence or possible existence of liability (or amount thereof) of any person for any tax, penalty, interest, fine, forfeiture, or other imposition or offense under the Code is return information under section 6103. It is also an agreement pursuant to a tax convention under section 6105. Return information, including taxpayer-specific competent authority agreements, remains subject to the confidentiality provisions of section 6103. Thus, civil and criminal penalties for the unauthorized disclosure of returns and return information continue to apply to return information that is also covered by section 6105. However, tax convention information that is return information may only be disclosed to the extent provided in, and subject to the terms and conditions of, the relevant tax convention.

[50] The D.C. Circuit recently remanded to the district court for factual development the issue of whether the closing agreement in that case was submitted in support of an exemption application, and therefore, subject to disclosure under section 6104. Tax Analysts v. IRS, 214 F.3d 179 (D.C. Cir 2000), vacating and remanding 99-2 U.S.T.C. (CCH) 794 (D.D.C. 1999).

[51] See e.g., Appendix A of Rev. Proc. 2000-38 which is a model "Closing Agreement on Final Determination Covering Specific Matters" regarding method of accounting for distributor commissions. Rev. Proc. 2000-38, 2000-40 I.R.B. 314-315 (October 2, 2000). That model agreement does not identify any particular taxpayer but sets forth the substance of the agreement.

Interaction with FOIA and section 6110

Under the provision, closing agreements and similar agreements would not be considered written determinations for purposes of section 6110 and, thus, would not be subject to public disclosure. Such agreements would be defined as return information under section 6103 and, therefore, such documents would be protected from disclosure pursuant to Exemption 3 of the FOIA in conjunction with section 6103.

In addition, under the provision, section 6110 would not apply to material covered by section 6105. In the litigation over FSAs, there has been some dispute as to whether treaties qualify as statutes for purposes of withholding information pursuant to Exemption 3 of the FOIA. The conferees believe that treaties are the equivalent of statutes for purposes of Exemption 3 of the FOIA. Section 6105 satisfies Exemption 3 of the FOIA. Taxpayer-specific tax convention information concerning a taxpayer's tax liability, such as taxpayer-specific competent authority agreements, would be exempt from the FOIA as both return information under section 6103 and information protected from disclosure by tax convention under section 6105. Agreements not relating to a particular taxpayer, and other tax convention information related to such agreements, could be disclosed under FOIA if it is determined that the disclosure would not impair tax administration.

EFFECTIVE DATE

The provision applies to disclosures on, or after, the date of enactment, and thus, applies to all documents in existence on, or created after, the date of enactment.

E. Increase Joint Committee on Taxation Refund Review Threshold to $2 Million (Sec. 705 of the Bill and Sec. 6405 of the Code)

PRESENT LAW

No refund or credit in excess of $1,000,000 of any income tax, estate or gift tax, or certain other specified taxes, may be made until 30 days after the date a report on the refund is provided to the Joint Committee on Taxation (sec. 6405). A report is also required in the case of certain tentative refunds. Additionally, the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation conducts post-audit reviews of large deficiency cases and other select issues.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement increases the threshold above which refunds must be submitted to the Joint Committee on Taxation for review from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000. The staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation would continue to exercise its existing statutory authority to conduct a program of expanded post-audit reviews of large deficiency cases and other select issues, and the IRS is expected to cooperate fully in this expanded program.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on the date of enactment, except that the higher threshold does not apply to a refund or credit with respect to which a report was made before the date of enactment.

F. Clarifying the Allowance of Certain Tax Benefits With Respect to Kidnapped Children (Sec. 706 of the Bill and Secs. 2, 24, 32, and 151 of the Code)

PRESENT LAW

The Code generally requires that a taxpayer provide over one-half of the support for each individual claimed as that taxpayer's dependent. Similarly, the child credit, the surviving spouse filing status, and the head of household filing status require that a taxpayer satisfy certain requirements with regard to individuals that qualify as the taxpayer's dependent(s). Finally, the earned income credit for taxpayers with qualifying children generally is available only if the taxpayer has the same principal place of abode for more than one-half the taxable year with an otherwise qualifying child.

Recently published IRS guidance first denied a dependency exemption to certain taxpayers with kidnapped children (TAM 200034029), then allowed such tax benefits to such taxpayers (TAM 200038059).

HOUSE BILL

No provision. However, H.R. 5117 clarifies that the dependency exemption, the child credit, the surviving spouse filing status, the head of household filing status, and the earned income credit are available to an otherwise qualifying taxpayer with respect to a child who is presumed by law enforcement authorities to have been kidnapped by someone who is not a member of the family of such child or the taxpayer. Generally, this treatment continues for all taxable years ending during the period that the child is kidnapped. However, this treatment ends for the taxable year ending after the calender year in which it is determined that the child is dead (or, if earlier, in which the child would have attained age 18).

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years ending after the date of enactment.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the provision of H.R. 5117.

G. Conforming Changes to Accommodate Reduced Issuances of Certain Treasury Securities (Sec. 707 of the Bill and Sec. 995(f)(4) of the Code)

PRESENT LAW

Code section 995(f)(4) dealing with the interest charge on the deferred tax liability of the shareholders of a domestic international sales corporation provides that the interest rate be determined by reference to the average investment yield on United States Treasury bills with maturities of 52 weeks. In addition, provisions of Federal law relating to interest on monetary judgments in civil cases recovered in Federal district court and on a judgment against the United States affirmed by the Supreme Court (Title 28), interest on certain unpaid criminal fines and penalties (Title 18), and interest on compensation for certain takings of property (Title 40) determine the applicable interest rate by reference to 52-week Treasury bills.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conferees understand that, as a result of prior Congressional efforts at budgetary control, current and projected Federal budget surpluses are reducing the need of the Treasury Department to issue certain securities. The Treasury Department has informed the Congress that on grounds of efficient debt management, and predictability and liquidity for the financial markets, the Treasury Department has announced it is likely to cease issuing 52-week Treasury bills. The conference agreement modifies the Code (sec. 995(f)(4)) and certain other parts of Federal law relating to interest on monetary judgments in civil cases recovered in Federal district court and on a judgment against the United States affirmed by the Supreme Court (Title 28), interest on certain unpaid criminal fines and penalties (Title 18), and interest on compensation for certain takings of property (Title 40) that make specific reference to yields on 52-week Treasury bills. The conference agreement generally replaces the reference to 52-week Treasury bills with a reference to the weekly average one-year constant maturity Treasury yield, as published by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

Effective date.—The provision is effective upon the date of enactment.

H. Authorization of Agencies to Use Corrected Consumer Price Index (Sec. 708 of the Bill)

PRESENT LAW

Code section 1(f) provides for adjustments in the tax tables so that inflation will not result in tax increases. Numerous other provisions of the Code are indexed as well. Section 1(f) provides that inflation is measured by changes in the consumer price index ("CPI") for the preceding year as published by the Department of Labor compared to the CPI for the calendar year 1992. Section 1(f) directs the Secretary to publish tables with applicable tax rates based upon calculated inflation adjustments by December 15 of the year before the year to which the tables are to apply.

In addition, payments made under Social Security, certain Federal employee retirement programs, and certain payments to individuals under various welfare and income support programs are adjusted annually by changes in the CPI.

On September 28, 2000, the Bureau of Labor Statistics ("BLS") announced that the agency had discovered a computational error in quality adjustments of air conditioning as a part of the cost of housing resulting in errors in the reported CPI between January 1999 and August 2000. The BLS reported that the CPI levels starting in January 1999 have been either 0.0, 0.1, or 0.2 index points lower than the levels that would have been published without the error. Consistent with agency guidelines and past practice, the BLS announced that it is revising the reported CPI back to January 2000 to the fully correct levels. The BLS will make no change to reported levels for January through December 1999. However, the BLS will make the corrected levels of the CPI for 1999 available upon request.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE BILL

No provision.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to use the corrected levels of the CPI for 1999 and 2000 for all purposes of the Code to which they might apply. The conference agreement directs the Secretary to prescribe new tables reflecting the correct levels of the 1999 CPI for the 2000 tax year.

In addition, the conference agreement provides that the Director of the Office of Management and Budget ("OMB") shall assess Federal benefit programs to ascertain the extent to which the CPI error has or will result in a shortfall in program payments to individuals for 2000 and future years. The conference agreement directs the Director to issue guidelines to agency administrators to determine the extent, if any, of such shortfalls in payments to individuals. The agency administrators are to report their findings to the Director and to Congress within 30 days. The conference agreement provides that, within 60 days of the date of enactment, the Director instruct the head of any Federal agency which administers an affected program to make a payment or payments to compensate for the shortfall and that such payments are targeted to the amount of the shortfall experienced by individual beneficiaries. Applicable Federal benefit programs include the old-age and survivors insurance program, the disability insurance program and the supplemental security income program under the Social Security Act and other programs as determined by the Director. The conference agreement directs the Director to report to the Congress on the activities performed pursuant to this provision by April 1, 2001.

The conferees recognize that the error in the CPI was computational in nature. The conferees support the BLS's policy to incorporate methodological changes only on a prospective basis. The conferees also understand that BLS policy provides that published indices generally not be revised except for those found to be in error for the year in which the error was discovered or within the past twelve months. The conferees recognize that the errors in the CPI date to as long as 20 months prior to the announcement of the error. The conferees recognize that the BLS's policy of not publishing corrected index numbers, beyond those provided as described above, has been applied in those rare cases where an error has been discovered in the past. However, the conferees understand that in the past 25 years the few errors that have been discovered have involved sub-indices and have not affected the level of the CPI itself. The last time the U.S. City Average All Items CPI was revised was in December 1974, when the values for the months of April through October 1974 were recalculated and released with issuance of the November CPI. Therefore, past precedent does not strictly apply to the present situation.

The conferees believe that integrity of official government data is vital to policymakers and private individuals and businesses throughout the country. The conferees emphasize that the CPI plays an important role in economic planning. For this reason the conferees are concerned that, while the BLS has published corrected CPI numbers for 2000, the BLS does not intend to publish corrected CPI numbers for 1999 as part of the official CPI series. To its credit, the BLS announced the error publicly. The national press reported the error.[52] In the absence of a correction to the official CPI series, the Federal government will be left in the position of maintaining, as an official data series, index numbers that the Federal government has admitted are incorrect. The conferees believe that the public's trust in the integrity of official government data is a paramount goal and the conferees strongly encourage the Commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics to review carefully the agency's current policy with respect to publishing as part of an official series corrections to data found to be in error for reasons of computational error. The conferees believe such a review should be made both with respect to the error announced on September 28, 2000, and as a matter for the future for those rare circumstances where such a similar computational error might once again arise.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

I. Prevent Duplication or Acceleration of Loss Through Assumption of Certain Liabilities (sec. 709 of the bill and sec. 358 of the Code)

PRESENT LAW

Generally, no gain or loss is recognized when one or more persons transfer property to a corporation in exchange for stock and immediately after the exchange such person or persons control the corporation. However, a transferor recognizes gain to the extent it receives money or other property ("boot") as part of the exchange (sec. 351).

The assumption of liabilities by the controlled corporation generally is not treated as boot received by the transferor,[53] except that the transferor recognizes gain to the extent that the liabilities assumed exceed the total of the adjusted basis of the property transferred to the controlled corporation pursuant to the exchange (sec. 357(c)).

The assumption of liabilities by the controlled corporation generally reduces the transferor's basis in the stock of the controlled corporation that assumed the liabilities. The transferor's basis in the stock of the controlled corporation is the same as the basis of the property contributed to the controlled corporation, increased by the amount of any gain (or dividend) recognized by the transferor on the exchange, and reduced by the amount of any money or property received, and by the amount of any loss recognized by the transferor (sec. 358). For this purpose, the assumption of a liability is treated as money received by the transferor.

An exception to the general treatment of assumptions of liabilities applies to assumptions of liabilities that would give rise to a deduction, provided the incurrence of such liabilities did not result in the creation or increase of basis of any property. The assumption of such liabilities is not treated as money received by the transferor in determining whether the transferor has gain on the exchange. Similarly, the transferor's basis in the stock of the controlled corporation is not reduced by the assumption of such liabilities. The Internal Revenue Service has ruled that the assumption by an accrual basis corporation of certain contingent liabilities for soil and groundwater remediation would be covered by this exception.[54]

HOUSE BILL

No provision. However, the conference agreement to the Taxpayer Refund and Relief Act of 1999 (H.R. 2488) included an earlier version of the legislation, effective for assumptions of liabilities after July 14, 1999.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision. However, the conference agreement to the Taxpayer Refund and Relief Act of 1999 (H.R. 2488) included an earlier version of the legislation, effective for assumptions of liabilities after July 14, 1999. In addition, on October 20, 1999, the Senate Finance Committee reported a bill (S. 1792) that contains a provision that limits the acceleration or duplication of losses through assumptions of liabilities. On April 4, 2000, Senators Roth and Moynihan introduced a bill that contains the same provision (S. 2354).

Effective date.—The provision in S. 2354 is effective for assumptions of liabilities on or after October 19, 1999. Except as provided by the Secretary, the rules addressing transactions involving partnerships are effective with the same effective date. Any rules addressing transactions involving S corporations may likewise be effective for assumptions of liabilities on or after October 19, 1999 or such later date as may be prescribed in such rules.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement adopts the provision in S. 2354.

Under the conference agreement, if the basis of stock (determined without regard to this provision) received by a transferor as part of a tax-free exchange with a controlled corporation exceeds the fair market value of the stock, then the basis of the stock received is reduced (but not below the fair market value) by the amount (determined as of the date of the exchange) of any liability that (1) is assumed in exchange for such stock, and (2) did not otherwise reduce the transferor's basis of the stock by reason of the assumption. Except as provided by the Secretary of the Treasury, this provision does not apply where the trade or business with which the liability is associated is transferred to the corporation as part of the exchange, or where substantially all the assets with which the liability is associated are transferred to the corporation as part of the exchange.

The exceptions for transfers of a trade or business, or of substantially all the assets, with which a liability is associated, are intended to obviate the need for valuation or basis reduction in such cases. The exceptions are not intended to apply to situations involving the selective transfer of assets that may bear some relationship to the liability, but that do not represent the full scope of the trade or business, (or substantially all the assets) with which the liability is associated.

[52] For example, John M. Berry, "Inflation Higher Than Reported," The Washington Post, September 27, 2000, p. E-1, John M. Berry, "Rent Error Leads to Revision Of the CPI," The Washington Post, September 29, 2000, p. E-3, Nicholas Kulish, "Major Price Index Is Revised Upward As Result of Error," The Wall Street Journal, September 28, 2000, p. A2, and Nicholas Kulish, "Second-Period GDP Rose at 5.6% Annual Rate," The Wall Street Journal, September 29, 2000, p. A2. The conferees observe that these press reports highlight the potential confusion for the public regarding these data. The Washington Post reported that "the CPI figures for 1999 were not revised" (September 29, 2000 story) while The Wall Street Journal reported that "[t]he BLS said a complete revision of all the data sets would be released" (September 28, 2000 story) and "it [BLS] announced that it would revise the index" (September 29, 2000 story).

[53] The assumption of liabilities is treated as boot if it can be shown that "the principal purpose" of the assumption is tax avoidance on the exchange, or is a non-bona fide business purpose (sec. 357(b)).

[54] Rev. Rul. 95-74, 1995-2 C.B. 36. The ruling addressed a parent corporation's transfer to a subsidiary of substantially all the assets of a manufacturing business, in exchange for stock and the assumption of liabilities associated with the business, including certain contingent environmental remediation liabilities. These liabilities arose due to contamination of land during the parent corporation's operation of the manufacturing business. The transferor had no plan or intention to dispose of (or to have the subsidiary issue) any subsidiary stock. The IRS ruled that the contingent liabilities would not reduce the transferor's basis in the stock of the subsidiary because the liabilities had not been taken into account by the transferor prior to the transfer and had not given rise to deductions or basis for the transferor.

For purposes of the provision, the term "liability" includes any fixed or contingent obligation to make payment, without regard to whether such obligation or potential obligation is otherwise taken into account under the Code. The determination whether a liability (as more broadly defined for purposes of this provision) has been assumed is made in accordance with the provisions of section 357(d)(1) of the Code. Under the standard of 357(d)(1), a recourse liability is treated as assumed if, based on all the facts and circumstances, the transferee has agreed to and is expected to satisfy such liability (or portion thereof), whether or not the transferor has been relieved of the liability. For example, if a transferee corporation does not formally assume a recourse obligation or potential obligation of the transferor, but instead agrees and is expected to indemnify the transferor with respect to all or a portion of a such an obligation, then the amount that is agreed to be indemnified is treated as assumed for purposes of the provision, whether or not the transferor has been relieved of such liability. Similarly, a nonrecourse liability is treated as assumed by the transferee of any asset subject to such liability.[55]

The application of the provision is illustrated in the following example: Assume a taxpayer transfers assets with an adjusted basis and fair market value of $100 to its wholly- owned corporation and the corporation assumes $40 of liabilities (the payment of which would give rise to a deduction). Thus, the value of the stock received by the transferor is $60. Under present law, the basis of the stock would be $100. The provision requires that the basis of the stock be reduced to $60 (i.e., a reduction of $40). Except as provided by the Secretary, no basis reduction is required if the transferred assets consisted of the trade or business, or substantially all the assets, with which the liability is associated.

The provision does not change the tax treatment with respect to the transferee corporation.

The Secretary of the Treasury is directed to prescribe rules providing appropriate adjustments to prevent the acceleration or duplication of losses through the assumption of liabilities (as defined in the provision) in transactions involving partnerships. The Secretary may also provide appropriate adjustments in the case of transactions involving S corporations. In the case of S corporations, such rules may be applied instead of the otherwise applicable basis reduction rules.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for assumptions of liabilities on or after October 19, 1999. Except as provided by the Secretary, the rules addressing transactions involving partnerships are effective with the same effective date Any rules addressing transactions involving S corporations may likewise be effective for assumptions of liabilities on or after October 19, 1999, or such later date as may be prescribed in such rules.

Subtitle B. Miscellaneous Provisions

A. Repeal Certain Excise Taxes on Rail Diesel Fuel and Inland Waterway Barge Fuels (sec. 710 of the bill and secs. 4041 and 4042 of the Code)

PRESENT LAW

Under present law, diesel fuel used in trains is subject to a 4.3-cents-per gallon General Fund excise tax. Similarly, fuels used in barges operating on the designated inland waterways system is subject to a 4.3-cents-per-gallon General Fund excise tax. In both cases, the 4.3-cents- per-gallon excise tax rates are permanent.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The 4.3-cents-per-gallon General Fund excise tax rates on diesel fuel used in trains and fuels used in barges operating on the designated inland waterways system is repealed.

Effective date.—The provision takes effect on January 1, 2001.

B. Repeal of Reduction of Deductions for Mutual Life Insurance Companies and of Policyholder Surplus Accounts of Life Insurance Companies (secs. 711–712 of the bill and secs. 809 and 815 of the Code)

PRIOR AND PRESENT LAW

Reduction in deductions for policyholder dividends and reserves of mutual life insurance companies (sec. 809)

In general, a corporation may not deduct amounts distributed to shareholders with respect to the corporation's stock. The Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 added a provision to the rules governing insurance companies that was intended to remedy the failure of prior law to distinguish between amounts returned by mutual life insurance companies to policyholders as customers, and amounts distributed to them as owners of the mutual company.

Under the provision, section 809, a mutual life insurance company is required to reduce its deduction for policyholder dividends by the company's differential earnings amount. If the company's differential earnings amount exceeds the amount of its deductible policyholder dividends, the company is required to reduce its deduction for changes in its reserves by the excess of its differential earnings amount over the amount of its deductible policyholder dividends. The differential earnings amount is the product of the differential earnings rate and the average equity base of a mutual life insurance company.

The differential earnings rate is based on the difference between the average earnings rate of the 50 largest stock life insurance companies and the earnings rate of all mutual life insurance companies. The mutual earnings rate applied under the provision is the rate for the second calendar year preceding the calendar year in which the taxable year begins. Under present law, the differential earnings rate cannot be a negative number.

A company's equity base equals the sum of: (1) its surplus and capital increased by 50 percent of the amount of any provision for policyholder dividends payable in the following taxable year; (2) the amount of its nonadmitted financial assets; (3) the excess of its statutory reserves over its tax reserves; and (4) the amount of any mandatory security valuation reserves, deficiency reserves, and voluntary reserves. A company's average equity base is the average of the company's equity base at the end of the taxable year and its equity base at the end of the preceding taxable year.

A recomputation or "true-up" in a subsequent year is required if the differential earnings amount for the taxable year either exceeds, or is less than, the recomputed differential earnings amount. The recomputed differential earnings amount is calculated taking into account the average mutual earnings rate for the calendar year (rather than the second preceding calendar year, as above). The amount of the true-up for any taxable year is added to, or deducted from, the mutual company's income for the succeeding taxable year.

Distributions to shareholders from policyholders surplus account (sec. 815)

Under the law in effect from 1959 through 1983, a life insurance company was subject to a three-phase taxable income computation under Federal tax law. Under the three-phase system, a company was taxed on the lesser of its gain from operations or its taxable investment income (Phase I) and, if its gain from operations exceeded its taxable investment income, 50 percent of such excess (Phase II). Federal income tax on the other 50 percent of the gain from operations[56] was deferred, and was accounted for as part of a policyholder's surplus account and, subject to certain limitations, taxed only when distributed to stockholders or upon corporate dissolution (Phase III). To determine whether amounts had been distributed, a company maintained a shareholders surplus account, which generally included the company's previously taxed income that would be available for distribution to shareholders.[57] Distributions to shareholders were treated as being first out of the shareholders surplus account, then out of the policyholders surplus account, and finally out of other accounts.

[55] Section 357(d)(2) contains a limitation in the case of certain nonrecourse liabilities. Also, under section 357, regulations, if issued, may provide for different results.

[56] The legislative history to the Life Insurance Company Tax Act of 1959 states that "[t]his 50 percent reduction in underwriting gains is made because of the claim that it is difficult to establish with certainty the actual annual income of life insurance companies. It has been pointed out that because of the long-term nature of their contracts, amounts, which may appear as income in the current year and as proper additions to surplus, may, as a result of subsequent events, be needed to fulfill life insurance contracts. Because of this difficulty in arriving at true underwriting gains on an annual basis, the bill provides for the taxation of only 50 percent of this gain on a current basis." Report of the Committee on Ways and Means to accompany H.R. 4245, H. Rep. No. 34, 86th Cong., 1st Sess. at 13 (1959). Similarly, the Senate report provides, "Although it is believed desirable to subject this underwriting income to tax, it is stated that because of the long-term nature of insurance contracts it is difficult, if not impossible, to determine the true income of life insurance companies otherwise than by ascertaining over a long period of time the income derived from a contract or block of contracts. Because of this, the bill as amended by your committee, like the bill as passed by the House, does not attempt to tax on an annual basis all of what might appear to be income. In both the House and your committee's bill, half of the underwriting income is taxed as it accrues each year. The other half of the underwriting income is taxed when it is paid out in a distribution to shareholders after the taxed income has been distributed, or when it is voluntarily segregated and held for the benefit of the shareholders. This other half of the underwriting income also is taxed if the cumulative amount exceeds certain prescribed limits or if for a specified period of time the company ceases to be a life insurance company." Report of the Committee on Finance to accompany H.R. 4245, S. Rep. No. 291, 86th Cong., 1st Sess. at 7 (1959).

[57] Other events are treated as a subtraction from the policyholders surplus account. If for any taxable year the taxpayer is not an insurance company, or for any 2 taxable years the company is not a life insurance company, then the balance in the policyholder surplus account at the close of the preceding

The Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 included provisions that, for 1984 and later years, eliminated further deferral of tax on amounts (described above) that previously would have been deferred under the three-phase system. Although for taxable years after 1983, life insurance companies may not enlarge their policyholders surplus account, the companies are not taxed on previously deferred amounts unless the amounts are treated as distributed to shareholders or subtracted from the policyholders surplus account (sec. 815).

Under present law, any direct or indirect distribution to shareholders from an existing policyholders surplus account of a stock life insurance company is subject to tax at the corporate rate in the taxable year of the distribution.[58] Present law (like prior law) provides that any distribution to shareholders is treated as made (1) first out of the shareholders surplus account, to the extent thereof, (2) then out of the policyholders surplus account, to the extent thereof, and (3) finally, out of other accounts.[59]

C. TAX-CREDIT BONDS FOR THE NATIONAL RAILROAD PASSENGER CORPORATION ("AMTRAK") AND THE ALASKA RAILROAD (SEC. 713 OF THE BILL AND NEW SEC. 54 OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

Present law does not authorize the issuance by any private, for-profit corporation of bonds the interest on which is tax-exempt or eligible for an income tax credit. Tax-exempt bonds may be issued by States or local governments to finance their governmental activities or to finance certain capital expenditures of private businesses or loans to individuals. Additionally, States or local governments may issue tax-credit bonds to finance the operation of "qualified zone academies."

Tax-exempt bonds

Interest on bonds issued by States or local governments to finance direct activities of those governmental units is excluded from tax (sec. 103). In addition, interest on certain bonds ("private activity bonds") issued by States or local governments acting as conduits to provide financing for private businesses or individuals is excluded from income if the purpose of the borrowing is specifically approved in the Code (sec. 141). Examples of approved private activities for which States or local governments may provide tax-exempt financing include transportation facilities (airports, ports, mass commuting facilities, and certain high speed intercity rail facilities); public works facilities such as water, sewer, and solid waste disposal; and certain social welfare programs such as low-income rental housing, student loans, and mortgage loans to certain first-time homebuyers. High speed intercity rail facilities eligible for tax-exempt financing include land, rail, and stations (but not rolling stock) for fixed guideway rail transportation of passengers and their baggage using vehicles that are reasonably expected to operate at speeds in excess of 150 miles per hour between scheduled stops.

Issuance of most private activity bonds is subject to annual State volume limits of $50 per resident ($150 million if greater). These volume limits are scheduled to increase to $75 per resident ($225 million if greater) over the period 2003 through 2007.

Investment earnings on all tax-exempt bonds, including earnings on invested sinking funds associated with such bonds is restricted by the Code to prevent the issuance of bonds earlier or in a greater amount than necessary for the purpose of the borrowing. In general, all profits on investment of such proceeds must be rebated to the Federal Government. Interest on bonds associated with invested sinking funds is taxable.

Tax-credit bonds for qualified zone academies

As an alternative to traditional tax-exempt bonds, certain States or local governments are given authority to issue "qualified zone academy bonds." A total of $400 million of qualified zone academy bonds is authorized to be issued in each year of 1998 through 2001. The $400 million is allocated to States according to their respective populations of individuals below the poverty line.

Qualified zone academy bonds are taxable bonds with respect to which the investor receives an income tax credit equal to an assumed interest rate set by the Treasury Department to allow issuance of the bonds without discount and without interest cost to the issuer. The bonds may be used for renovating, providing equipment to, developing course materials for, or training teachers in eligible schools. Eligible schools are elementary and secondary schools with respect to which private entities make contributions equaling at least 10 percent of the bond proceeds.

Only financial institutions are eligible to claim the credits on qualified zone academy bonds. The amount of the credit is taken into income. The credit may be claimed against both regular income tax and AMT liability.

There are no arbitrage restrictions applicable to investment earnings on qualified zone academy bond proceeds.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision, but S. 3152, authorizes the National Railroad Passenger Corporation ("Amtrak") and the Alaska Railroad to issue an aggregate amount of $10 billion of tax-credit bonds to finance its capital projects. Annual issuance of the bonds may not exceed $1 billion per year (plus any authorized amount that was not issued in previous years) during the ten Fiscal Year period, 2001–2010. Unused bond authority could be carried forward to succeeding years until used, subject to a limitation that no tax-credit bonds could be issued after fiscal year 2015.

Projects eligible for tax-credit bond financing are defined as the acquisition, construction of equipment, rolling stock, and other capital improvements for (1) the northeast rail corridor between Washington, D.C. and Boston, Massachusetts;[60] (2) high-speed rail corridors designated under section 104(d)(2) of Title 23 of the United States Code; and (3) other intercity passenger rail corridors, including station rehabilitation or construction, track or signal improvements, or grade crossing elimination. Item 3 is limited to a maximum of 10 percent of the proceeds of any bond issue. At least 70 percent of the authorized tax-credit bonds must be issued for projects described in (2) and (3). No more than $3 billion of the bonds may be designated for any one high-speed rail corridor.

As with qualified zone academy bonds, the interest rate on Amtrak/Alaska Railroad tax-credit bonds will be set to allow issuance of the bonds at par, i.e., without any interest cost to Amtrak or the Alaska Railroad. In general, proceeds of Amtrak/Alaska Railroad tax-credit bonds would have to be spent within 36 months after the bonds are issued. As of the date the bonds were issued, Amtrak or the Alaska Railroad must certify that it reasonably expects—

(1) to incur a binding obligation with a third party to spend at least 10 percent of the bond proceeds within six months (or in the case of self-constructed property, to have commenced construction or preliminary engineering studies within six months);

(2) to spend the bond proceeds with due diligence; and

(3) to spend at least 95 percent of the proceeds for qualifying capital costs within three years.

Amtrak/Alaska Railroad tax-credit bonds may only be issued for projects that are approved by the Department of Transportation and, in the case of Amtrak, with respect to which there are binding commitments from one or more States to make matching contributions of at least 20 percent of the project cost. Projects having State matching contributions in excess of 20 percent are given a preference. The State matching contributions, along with earnings on investment of the tax-credit bond proceeds must be invested in a trust account (i.e., a sinking fund) and used along with earnings on the trust account for repayment of the principal amount of the bonds.

taxable year is taken into income (former sec. 815(d)(2) as in effect prior to the 1984 Act, which is referred to in present-law sec. 815(f)). Further, the policyholder surplus account is reduced by the excess of the account over the greatest of 3 amounts related to reserves: (1) 15 percent of life insurance reserves at the end of the taxable year; (2) 25 percent of the amount by which the life insurance reserves at the end of the taxable year exceed the life insurance reserve at the end of 1958; or (3) 50 percent of the net amount of the premiums and other consideration taken into account for the taxable year (former sec. 815(d)(4)(A)-(C), as in effect prior to the 1984 Act, which is referred to in present-law sec. 815(f)).

[58] Section 815.

[59] Section 815(b).

[60] $92 million of Amtrak's tax-credit bond authority for Northeast Corridor projects is set aside for the acquisition and installation of platform facilities, performance of railroad force account work necessary to complete improvements below grade, and any other necessary improvements related to construction at the new railroad station at the James A. Farley Post Office Building in New York City. Projects finance with this $92 million of tax-credit bonds are not subject to the Senate contribution requirement, described below.

Amtrak/Alaska Railroad tax-credit bonds can be owned (and income tax credits claimed) by any taxpayer. The amount of the credit will be included in the bondholder's income. Additionally, provisions are included in the proposal to allow the credits to be stripped and sold to different investors than the investors in the bond principal.

The required State matching contribution may not be derived from Federal monies. Any Federal Highway Trust Fund monies transferred to the States are treated as Federal monies for this purpose. During the period when tax-credit bonds are authorized, Amtrak and the Alaska Railroad are not allowed to receive any Highway Trust Fund monies other than those authorized on the date of the provision's enactment.

Amtrak is required annually to submit a five-year capital plan to Congress, and to satisfy independent oversight requirements with respect to the management of tax-credit-bond-financed projects. Finally, the Treasury Department is required to certify annually that funds deposited in the escrow accounts for repayment of tax-credit bonds issued by Amtrak (with actual and projected earnings thereon) are sufficient to ensure full repayment of the bond principal.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for tax credit bonds issued by Amtrak or the Alaska Railroad after September 30, 2000.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the Senate amendment, with several modifications and clarifications.

First, the expenditure requirements applicable to these tax credit bonds are modified to add an actual expenditure requirement to the Senate amendment's reasonable expectations test. Under the actual expenditure requirement, unless at least 95 percent of the bond proceeds is spent within 3 years after the bonds are issued, unspent proceeds must be used to redeem bonds within 90 days after the end of the period. An exception allows the expenditure period to be extended to four years if (1) at least 75 percent of the proceeds are spent within the initial three year period, (2) the issuer has proceeded with due diligence to spend the proceeds within the initial three-year period, and (3) the issuer pays to the Federal Government all earnings on unspent proceeds that accrue after the end of the initial three-year period. If the issuer qualifies for the exception, but fails to satisfy its spending requirements, unspent proceeds must be used to redeem bonds within 90 days after the end of the four-year period.

Second, the definition of qualified expenditures is modified to preclude the use of bond proceeds to refinance outstanding debt except for "bridge" and similar financing incurred for a qualified project pending issuance of tax-credit bonds. Qualified bridge financing is defined as financing that (1) is issued after the date of enactment of the provision, (2) has a term of not more than three years, (3) is used to finance or acquire capital improvements that qualify for tax-credit bond financing, and (4) is issued in anticipation of being refinanced with proceeds of tax-credit bonds.

Third, provisions are added requiring that tax-credit-bond-financed property be continuously used for a qualified purpose throughout the term of the bonds.

Fourth, clarification is provided that the use of tax-credit bond proceeds to redeem bonds (except as required above and except with regard to not more than five percent of the bond proceeds) is not a qualified expenditure. A further modification allows Amtrak to treat as a qualified project expenditure, expenditure of not more than 0.5 percent of bond proceeds for costs of complying with the oversight requirements imposed on that railroad by the conference agreement.

Fifth, clarification is provided that the tax credit rate is determined on the date the bonds are sold (rather than the actual issuance date, if different).

Sixth, the Senate amendment is modified to require actual deposit in to the Trust Account securing repayment of the bonds of the required State contributions before any tax-credit bonds are issued.

Seventh, for bonds issued by Amtrak, the Senate amendment is modified to require (in addition to approval by the Secretary of Transportation) a finding by the Inspector General of the Department of Transportation that there is "a reasonable likelihood" that the proposed projects will result "in a positive incremental financial contribution" to Amtrak and to specify criteria to be used in making this determination.

Return on investment.—The measurements used to evaluate the amount of return on investment shall include (1) the positive incremental financial contribution to Amtrak, including all system-wide impacts and (2) the value of the net cash flow to Amtrak produced over the life of the program, discounted to current dollars. Such net cash flow should take into consideration operating efficiencies produced as a result of the total capital investment as well as incremental passenger related, mail and express, State and other revenue as a result of the total capital investment.

Leveraging of funds.—The measurements used to evaluate the leveraging of funds shall include (1) the amount of public and private match provided for the program, (2) the percentage of public and private match provided for the program relative to Amtrak's contribution and (3) the stability or reliability of state and local capital and operating support.

Cost effectiveness.—The measurement used to evaluate cost effectiveness is the incremental cost to Amtrak per incremental passenger or the incremental cost to Amtrak per incremental revenue generated as a result of the capital investment.

Safety improvement.—The measurements used to evaluate safety improvement shall include (1) the prevention or reduction of customer or third party injuries and (2) the prevention or reduction of employee injuries.

Mobility improvement.—The measurements used to evaluate the level of mobility improvement shall include (1) travel time savings and (2) low income households served.

Feasibility.—The measurements used to evaluate feasibility shall include (1) timing of program implementation, (2) technical feasibility and (3) likelihood of public and private participation.

Eighth, clarification is provided that the tax-credit bonds are the obligation of the issuing railroad notwithstanding the existence of the Trust Account securing their repayment. As in the case of other tax-preferred debt, no implied Federal Guarantee arises by virtue of the availability of tax credits on these bonds.

Ninth, the Senate amendment is modified to provide that funds in the Trust Account that are not required to redeem bonds may be used for additional qualified projects.

D. FARM, FISH, AND RANCH RISK MANAGEMENT ACCOUNTS ("FFARRM ACCOUNTS") (SEC. 714 OF THE BILL AND NEW SEC. 468C OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

There is no provision in present law allowing the elective deferral of farm or fishing income.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision. However, S. 3152 allows taxpayers engaged in an eligible business to establish FFARRM accounts. An eligible business is any trade or business of farming in which the taxpayer actively participates, including the operation of a nursery or sod farm or the raising or harvesting of crop-bearing or ornamental trees. An eligible business also is the trade or business of commercial fishing as that term is defined under section (3) of the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act (16 U.S.C. 1802) and includes the trade or business of catching, taking or harvesting fish that are intended to enter commerce through sale, barter or trade.

Contributions to a FFARRM account are deductible and are limited to 20 percent of the taxable income that is attributable to the eligible business. The deduction is taken into account in determining adjusted gross income and reduces the income attributable to the eligible business for all income tax purposes other than the determination of the 20 percent of eligible income limitation on contributions to a FFARRM account. Contributions to a FFARRM account do not reduce earnings from self-employment. Accordingly, distributions are not included in self-employment income.

A FFARRM account is taxed as a grantor trust and any earnings are required to be distributed currently. Thus, any income earned in the FFARRM account is taxed currently to the farmer or fisherman who established the account. Amounts can remain on deposit in a FFARRM account for up to five years. Any amount that has not been distributed by the close of the fourth year following the year of deposit is deemed to be distributed and includible in the gross income of the account owner.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the provision of S. 3152.

E. EXTENSION AND MODIFICATION OF ENHANCED DEDUCTION FOR CORPORATE DONATIONS OF COMPUTER TECHNOLOGY (SEC. 715 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 170 (e)(6) OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

The maximum charitable contribution deduction that may be claimed by a corporation for any one taxable year is limited to 10 percent of the corporation's taxable income for that year (disregarding charitable contributions and with certain other modifications) (sec. 170(b)(2)). Corporations also are subject to certain limitations based on the type of property contributed. In the case of a charitable contribution of short-term gain property, inventory, or other ordinary income property, the amount of the deduction generally is limited to the taxpayer's basis (generally, cost) in the property. However, special rules in the Code provide an augmented deduction for certain corporate contributions. Under these special rules, the amount of the augmented deduction is equal to the lesser of (1) the basis of the donated property plus one-half of the amount of ordinary income that would have been realized if the property had been sold, or (2) twice the basis of the donated property.

Section 170(e)(6) allows corporate taxpayers an augmented deduction for qualified contributions of computer technology and equipment (i.e., computer software, computer or peripheral equipment, and fiber optic cable related to computer use) to be used within the United States for educational purposes in grades K–12. Eligible donees are: (1) any educational organization that normally maintains a regular faculty and curriculum and has a regularly enrolled body of pupils in attendance at the place where its educational activities are regularly carried on; and (2) tax-exempt charitable organizations that are organized primarily for purposes of supporting elementary and secondary education. A private foundation also is an eligible donee, provided that, within 30 days after receipt of the contribution, the private foundation contributes the property to an eligible donee described above.

Qualified contributions are limited to gifts made no later than two years after the date the taxpayer acquired or substantially completed the construction of the donated property. In addition, the original use of the donated property must commence with the donor or the donee. Accordingly, qualified contributions generally are limited to property that is no more than two years old. Such donated property could be computer technology or equipment that is inventory or depreciable trade or business property in the hands of the donor.

Donee organizations are not permitted to transfer the donated property for money or services (e.g., a donee organization cannot sell the computers). However, a donee organization may transfer the donated property in furtherance of its exempt purposes and be reimbursed for shipping, installation, and transfer costs. For example, if a corporation contributes computers to a charity that subsequently distributes the computers to several elementary schools in a given area, the charity could be reimbursed by the elementary schools for shipping, transfer, and installation costs.

The special treatment applies only to donations made by C corporations. S corporations, personal holding companies, and service organizations are not eligible donors.

The provision is scheduled to expire for contributions made in taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision. However, S. 3152 includes a provision that extends the current enhanced deduction for donations of computer technology and equipment through December 31, 2003. In addition, S. 3152 expands the enhanced deduction to include donations to public libraries.

Effective date.—The provision is effective upon the date of enactment.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows S. 3152 with a modification that qualified contributions include gifts made no later than three years after the date the taxpayer acquired or substantially completed the construction of the donated property.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for contributions made after December 31, 2000.

F. Settlement of Certain Discrimination Claims Brought by Farmers Against the Department of Agriculture (sec. 716 of the bill)

PRESENT LAW

Income tax

Gross income means "income from whatever source derived" except for certain items specifically excluded by statute.[61] Sources of income include compensation for services, interest, dividends, capital gains, rents, royalties, gross profits from a trade or business, income from the discharge of indebtedness, and income from S corporations, partnerships, trusts, and estates. In determining taxable income, a taxpayer's gross income is reduced by exemptions and deductions. Absent any applicable exemption or exclusion, an amount received by an individual in the settlement of a lawsuit generally is includible in gross income.

HOUSE BILL

No provision. However, H.R. 2233 excludes from gross income any cash received or cancellation of indebtedness income as a result of the settlement of certain claims brought by certain farmers against the Department of Agriculture for discrimination in farm credit and benefit programs. The bill further provides that such amounts are not included in the gross estate of any qualified person for estate tax purposes. Finally, the bill provides that these amounts are not to be (1) considered income or resources in determining eligibility for, (2) used to deny or reduce funds under, or (3) used as a basis for determining the amount of assistance under, any program funded in whole or in part with Federal funds. The bill is limited to certified members of the plaintiff class in the settlement of two consolidated class action suits. The two suits are Pigford, et al. v. Glickman No. 97–1978 (D.D.C.)(PLF) and Brewington, et al. v. Glickman No. 98–1693 (D.D.C.)(PLF).

Effective date.—The provision is effective after the date of enactment.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the provision of H.R. 2233, with modifications. The conference agreement provision provides an exclusion of certain amounts from gross income for purposes of Subtitle A of the Internal Revenue Code. This exclusion applies to any (1) cash payment received before, on, or after the date of enactment by or made on behalf of, a person under the settlement of these two claims or (2) cancellation of indebtedness income pursuant to the settlement of these two claims. The conference agreement does not include the provision of H.R. 2233 that provides an exclusion of amounts from the gross estate of any qualified person, for estate tax purposes. Further, the conference agreement does not include the provision of H.R. 2233 providing that amounts are not to be (1) considered income or resources in determining eligibility for, (2) used to deny or reduce funds under, or (3) used as a basis for determining the amount of assistance under, any program funded in whole or in part with Federal funds.

G. Extension of the Adoption Tax Credit (sec. 717 of the bill and sec. 23 of the Code)

PRESENT LAW

Taxpayers are entitled to a maximum nonrefundable credit against income tax liability of $5,000 per child for qualified adoption expenses paid or incurred by the taxpayer (sec. 23). In the case of a special needs adoption, the maximum credit amount is $6,000. A special needs child is a child who is a citizen or resident of the United States and who the State has determined: (1) cannot or should not be returned to the home of the birth parents, and (2) has a specific factor or condition because of which the child cannot be placed with adoptive parents without adoption assistance. The adoption of a child who is not a citizen or a resident of the United States is a foreign adoption.

Qualified adoption expenses are reasonable and necessary adoption fees, court costs, attorneys' fees, and other expenses that are directly related to the legal adoption of an eligible child. All reasonable and necessary expenses required by a State as a condition of adoption are qualified adoption expenses. Otherwise qualified adoption expenses paid or incurred in one taxable year are not taken into account for purposes of the credit until the next taxable year unless the expenses are paid or incurred in the year the adoption becomes final.

An eligible child is an individual (1) who has not attained age 18 or (2) who is physically or mentally incapable of caring for himself or herself. After December 31, 2001, the credit will be available only for special needs adoptions.

No credit is allowed for expenses incurred (1) in violation of State or Federal law, (2) in carrying out any surrogate parenting arrangement, (3) in connection with the adoption of a child of the taxpayer's spouse, (4) that are reimbursed under an employer adoption assistance program or otherwise, or (5) for a foreign adoption that is not finalized.

The credit is phased out ratably for taxpayers with modified AGI above $75,000, and is fully phased out at $115,000 of modified AGI. For these purposes modified AGI is computed by increasing the taxpayer's AGI by the amount otherwise excluded from gross income under Code sections 911, 931, or 933.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision. However, S. 3152 extends the adoption credit for the adoption of non- special needs children for two years through December 31, 2003.

Effective date.—The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement extends the credit for nonspecial needs adoptions to include qualified adoption expenses paid or incurred prior to December 31, 2005, and increases the maximum credit by $1,000 per year beginning for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000 and until the maximum credit reaches $10,000 per year for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2004. In the case of special needs adoptions, the maximum credit is increased by $2,000 per year for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000 until the maximum credit reaches $12,000 per year for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2002.

Additionally, for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000, the income limitation for the credit is increased to $150,000 of modified AGI, and is phased out ratably for taxpayers with modified AGI between $150,000 and $190,000.

Effective date.—The provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000.

H. Study of Tax Treatment with Respect to Certain Offshore Insurance Companies (sec. 718 of the bill)

PRESENT LAW

Under present law, under the rules of subchapter L of the Code, a life insurance company is subject to tax on its life insurance company taxable income. Similarly, a property and casualty insurance company is subject to tax on its taxable income, which is calculated by taking into account the company's underwriting income and investment income, as well as gains and other income items. An insurance company may enter into a reinsurance contract or agreement with another insurer, whereby risks, or portions of risks, are transferred from one insurer to another or are shared or allocated among insurers.

[61] Section 61.

Present law provides rules governing allocation in the case of reinsurance agreements that involve tax avoidance or evasion. Under this rule, in the case of two or more related persons that are parties to a reinsurance agreement (or an agent of a party to a reinsurance agreement), the Treasury Secretary may allocate between or among such persons income (whether investment income, premium or otherwise), deductions, assets, reserves, credits, and other items related to the agreement. The Treasury Secretary may also recharacterize any such items or make any other adjustment. The Secretary may make the allocation, recharacterization or adjustment if he determines that it is necessary to reflect the proper source and character of the taxable income (or other item) of each related person or agent.[62]

Other rules also provide for the allocation of income and deductions among taxpayers. In any case of two or more organizations owned or controlled directly or indirectly by the same interests, the Treasury Secretary may distribute, apportion, or allocate gross income, deductions, credits, or allowances between or among the organizations, if he determines that it is necessary in order to prevent evasion of taxes or clearly to reflect the income of the organizations.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement provides that the Secretary of the Treasury is to conduct a study on the extent to which U. S. tax on investment income of U.S. insurance companies is being avoided through the use of affiliated corporations in Bermuda or other offshore locations. In conducting the study, the Treasury Secretary is to address issues concerning the application of current U.S. tax law in preventing such avoidance, changes to U.S. tax law that may be needed to prevent such avoidance, and is to make appropriate recommendations. The Treasury Secretary is to submit the study and recommendations to the House Committee on Ways and Means and the Senate Committee on Finance no later than December 31, 2001.

I. TREATMENT OF INDIAN TRIBES AS NON-PROFIT ORGANIZATIONS AND STATE OR LOCAL GOVERNMENTS FOR PURPOSES OF THE FEDERAL UNEMPLOYMENT TAX ("FUTA") (SEC. 719 OF THE BILL AND SEC. 3306 OF THE CODE)

PRESENT LAW

Present law imposes a net tax on employers equal to 0.8 percent of the first $7,000 paid annually to each employee. The current gross FUTA tax is 6.2 percent, but employers in States meeting certain requirements and having no delinquent loans are eligible for a 5.4 percent credit making the net Federal tax rate 0.8 percent. Both non-profit organizations and State and local governments are not required to pay FUTA taxes. Instead they may elect to reimburse the unemployment compensation system for unemployment compensation benefits actually paid to their former employees. Generally, Indian tribes are not eligible for the reimbursement treatment allowable to non-profit organizations and State and local governments.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision. However, S. 3152 provides that an Indian tribe (including any subdivision, subsidiary, or business enterprise chartered and wholly owned by an Indian tribe) is treated like a non-profit organization or State or local government for FUTA purposes (i.e., given an election to choose the reimbursement treatment).

Effective date.—The provision generally is effective with respect to service performed beginning on or after the date of enactment. Under a transition rule, service performed in the employ of an Indian tribe is not treated as employment for FUTA purposes if: (1) it is service which is performed before the date of enactment and with respect to which FUTA tax has not been paid; and (2) such Indian tribe reimburses a State unemployment fund for unemployment benefits paid for service attributable to such tribe for such period.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement follows the provision of S. 3152.

Subtitle C. Tax Technical Corrections

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement includes tax technical corrections.[61] Except as otherwise provided, the technical corrections contained in the bill generally are effective as if included in the originally enacted related legislation. The provisions under the IRS Restructuring Act of 1998 relating to innocent spouse and to procedural and administrative issues (other than the provision relating to clarification of Tax Court authority to issue appealable decisions) are effective upon the date of enactment of the bill.

Amendments Relating to the Ticket to Work and Work Incentives Improvement Act of 1999 (sec. 721 of the bill)

Research credit.—The provision clarifies the anti-double dip rule coordinating the research credit (sec. 41) and the Puerto Rico economic activity credit (sec. 30A). It is arguable that the present-law provisions could be construed so that the amount of wages on which a taxpayer could claim the section 30A credit is reduced only by the amount of credit claimed under section 41, rather than by the amount of wages upon which the section 41 credit is based. This result is inconsistent with the legislative history of the original provisions. The provision deletes the words "or credit" after "deduction" in section 280C(c)(1), and adds a new subsection in section 30A specifying that wages or other expenses taken into account for section 30A may not be taken into account for section 41.

Taxable REIT subsidiaries.—The provision clarifies that a REIT's redetermined rents (described in sec. 857(b)(7)(B)) that are subject to tax under section 857(b)(7)(A) do not include amounts received from a taxable REIT subsidiary that would be excluded from unrelated business taxable income (under sec. 512(b)(3), relating to certain rents, if received by certain types of organizations described in sec. 511(a)(2)).

Partnership basis adjustments.—The provision provides that the rule in the consolidated return regulations (Treas. Reg. sec. 1.1502-34) aggregating stock ownership for purposes of section 332 (relating to complete liquidation of a subsidiary that is a controlled corporation) also applies for purposes of section 732(f) (relating to basis adjustments to assets of a controlled corporation received in a partnership distribution).

Amendments related to the Tax and Trade Relief Extension Act of 1998 (sec. 722 of the bill)

Exempt organizations.—The provision clarifies that nonexempt charitable trusts and nonexempt private foundations are subject to the public disclosure requirements of section 6104(d).

Capital gains.—The provision clarifies that if (1) a charitable remainder trust sold section 1250 property after July 28, 1997, and before January 1, 1998, (2) the property was held more than one year but not more than 18 months, and (3) the capital gain is distributed after December 31, 1997, then any capital gain attributable to depreciation will be taxed at 25 percent (rather than 28 percent). Treasury has published a notice (Notice 99-17, 1999-14 I.R.B., April 5, 1999) providing that the gain is taxed at 25 percent.

Amendments related to the Internal Revenue Service Restructuring and Reform Act of 1998 (sec. 723 of the bill)

Innocent spouse

Timing of request for relief.—Confusion currently exists as to the appropriate point at which a request for innocent spouse relief should be made by the taxpayer and considered by the IRS. Some have read the statute to prohibit consideration by the IRS of requests for relief until after an assessment has been made, i.e., after the examination has been concluded, and if challenged, judicially determined. Others have read the statute to permit claims for relief from deficiencies to be made upon the filing of the return before any preliminary determination as to whether a deficiency exists or whether the return will be examined. The consideration of innocent spouse relief requires that the IRS focus on the particular items causing a deficiency; until such items are identified, the IRS cannot consider these claims. Congress did not intend that taxpayers be prohibited from seeking innocent spouse relief until after an assessment has been made; Congress intended the proper time to raise and have the IRS consider a claim to be at the same point where a deficiency is being considered and asserted by the IRS. This is the least disruptive for both the taxpayer and the IRS since it allows both to focus on the innocent spouse issue while also focusing on the items that might cause a deficiency. It also permits every issue, including the innocent spouse issue, to be resolved in single administrative and judicial process. The bill clarifies the intended time by permitting the election under (b) and (c) to be made at any point after a deficiency has been asserted by the IRS. A deficiency is considered to have been asserted by the IRS at the time the IRS states that additional taxes may be owed. Most commonly, this occurs during the Examination process. It does not require an assessment to have been made, nor does it require the exhaustion of administrative remedies in order for a taxpayer to be permitted to request innocent spouse relief.

[62] H.R. 4192 (106th Cong., 2d. Sess.,) introduced April 5, 2000, would modify these rules relating to reinsurance transactions. That bill would provide that if a domestic person directly or indirectly reinsurances a U.S. risk with a related foreign reinsurer, then the investment income of the domestic person would be increased by the product of (1) the reserves or liabilities related to the U.S. risk ceded to the foreign reinsurer, and (2) the average applicable Federal mid-term rate.

[61] In addition to other tax technical corfections, the bill contains the technical corrections contained in H.R. 2488, the Financial Freedom Act of 1999 (106th Cong., 1st Sess., reported by the House Committee on Ways and Means, H. Rept. 106-238, July 16, 1999, 393-397), as passed by the House, and S. 1429, the Taxpayer Refund Act of 1999 (reported by the Senate Committee on Finance, S. Rept. 106-120, July 23, 1999, 221-225), as passed by the Senate. (The technical corrections were not included in the conference agreement to H.R. 2488, the Taxpayer Refund and Relief Act of 1999 (106th Cong., 1st Sess., H. Rept. 106-289, Aug. 4, 1999, 542-543). The Taxpayer Refund and Relief Act of 1999 was vetoed by President Clinton.) However, the bill does not include the following provisions enacted in other legislation: sections 1601(b)(2) and (c) of H.R. 2488 (and section 504(c) of S. 1429), relating to the Vaccine Trust Fund, which were enacted in the "Ticket to Work and Work Incentives Improvement Act of 1999" (P.L. 106-170, sec. 523(b)).

Allowance of refunds.—The current placement in the statute of the provision for allowance of refunds may inappropriately suggest that the provision applies only to the United States Tax Court, whereas it was intended to apply administratively and in all courts. The bill clarifies this by moving the provision to its own subsection.

Non-exclusivity of judicial remedy.—Some have suggested that the IRS Restructuring Act administrative and judicial process for innocent spouse relief was intended to be the exclusive avenue by which relief could be sought. The bill clarifies Congressional intent that the procedures of section 6015(e) were intended to be additional, non-exclusive avenues by which innocent spouse relief could be considered.

Time for filing a petition with the Tax Court.—As enacted, the time period for seeking a redetermination in the Tax Court of innocent spouse relief begins on the date of the determination as opposed to the day after the determination. This period is one day shorter than that generally applicable to petition the Tax Court with respect to a deficiency notice (sec. 6213) and the period during which collection activities are prohibited and the limitations period is suspended. The bill clarifies the computation of this period and conforms it to the generally applicable 90-day period for petitioning the Tax Court. Conforming amendments are made as to the period for which collection activities are prohibited and collection limitations suspended.

Waiver of final determination upon agreement as to relief.—Congress intended in enacting section 6015 to provide a simple and efficient procedure by which the IRS could consider relief, and if relief was denied (in whole or in part) and the spouse requesting such relief did not agree with such denial, such issue could be considered by the Tax Court. Congress did not intend to require a rigid formal process when the IRS and the spouse requesting relief agreed on the extent of relief to be granted. However, the provisions of section 6015(e) have been interpreted as requiring the issuance in all circumstances of a formal "Notice of Determination," which contains a statement of the time period within which a petition may be filed with the Tax Court and which delays final resolution of the request for relief until the expiration of the period for filing a petition with the Tax Court. The issuance of the Notice of Determination is confusing to the taxpayer when the requested relief was fully granted or when the IRS and the taxpayer otherwise agreed on the application of the innocent spouse provisions to the taxpayer's case. It also may cause unnecessary filings with the Tax Court and delay the closing of the case until the time for filing with the Tax Court expires.

Congress has addressed the analogous situation in the deficiency context in section 6213(d). In such situations, upon written agreement, the IRS may adjust the taxpayer's liability as agreed, and no additional formal notice is necessary. The bill reflects that an analogous waiver was intended to apply in the innocent spouse context. The bill consequently permits taxpayers and the IRS to enter into a similar written agreement in innocent spouse cases, which allows for the taxpayer's liability to be immediately adjusted as agreed, and makes unnecessary a formal Notice of Determination or Tax Court review. This written agreement is to specify the details of the agreement between the IRS and the taxpayer as to the nature and extent of innocent spouse relief that will be provided. Conforming amendments are made as to the period for which collection activities are prohibited and collection limitations suspended.

Procedural and administrative issues

Disputes involving $50,000 or less.—The provision clarifies that the small case procedures of the Tax Court are available with respect to innocent spouse disputes and disputes continuing from the pre-levy administrative due process hearing. The small case procedures provide an accessible forum for taxpayers who have small claims with less formal rules of evidence and procedure. Use of the procedure is optional to the taxpayer, with the concurrence of the Tax Court. In view of the recent enactment of the innocent spouse and pre-levy administrative due process hearing provisions, it is anticipated that the Tax Court will give careful consideration to (1) a motion by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to remove the small case designation (as authorized by Rules 172 and 173 of the Tax Court Rules) when the orderly conduct of the work of the Court or the administration of the tax laws would be better served by a regular trial of the case, as well as (2) the financial impact upon the taxpayer, including additional legal fees and costs, of not utilizing small case treatment. For example, removing the small case designation may be appropriate when a decision in the case will provide a precedent for the disposition of a substantial number of other cases. It is anticipated that motions by the Commissioner to remove the small case designation will be made infrequently.

Authority to enjoin collection actions.—While a dispute is pending under the pre-levy administrative due process hearing procedures, levy action is statutorily suspended for that period. The Tax Court and district courts are expressly granted authority to enjoin improper levy action in general, but that authority does not explicitly extend to improper levy action that occurs during the period when levy action is statutorily suspended under the administrative due process provisions. The provision clarifies the ability of the courts (including the Tax Court) to enjoin levy during the period that levy is required to be suspended with respect to a dispute under the pre-levy administrative due process hearing procedures.

Clarification of permissible extension of limitations period for installment agreements.—Uncertainty exists as to whether the permissible extension of the period of limitations in the context of installment agreements is governed by reference to an agreement of the parties pursuant to section 6502 or by reference to the period of time during which the installment agreement is in effect pursuant to sections 6331(k)(3) and (i)(5). The provision clarifies that the permissible extension of the period of limitations in the context of installment agreements is governed by the pertinent provisions of section 6502.

Clarification of Tax Court authority to issue appealable decisions.—The statutory provision for judicial review of a dispute concerning the pre-levy administrative due process hearing may be unclear as to whether a determination of the Tax Court is an appealable decision. The provision clarifies that the determination of the Tax Court (other than under the small case procedures) in a dispute concerning the pre-levy administrative due process hearing is a decision of the Tax Court and would be reviewable as such.

Other issues

IRS restructuring.—When the Office of the Chief Inspector was replaced by the Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration (TIGTA) under the IRS Restructuring and Reform Act of 1998, Inspection's responsibilities were assigned to the TIGTA. TIGTA personnel are Treasury, rather than IRS, personnel. TIGTA personnel still need to make investigative disclosures to carry out the duties they took over from Inspection and their additional tax administration responsibilities. However, section 6103(k)(6) refers only to "internal revenue" personnel. The provision clarifies that section 6103(k)(6) permits TIGTA personnel to make investigative disclosures.

Compliance.—Section 3509 of the IRS Restructuring and Reform Act of 1998 expanded the disclosure rules of section 6110 to also cover Chief Counsel advice (sec. 6110(i)). This is a conforming change related to ongoing investigations. The provision adds to section 6110(g)(5)(A), after the words technical advice memorandum, "or Chief Counsel advice."

Amendments related to the Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 (sec. 724 of the bill)

Deficiency created by overstatement of refundable child credit.—The provision treats the refundable portion of the child credit under section 24(d) as part of a "deficiency." Thus, the usual assessment procedures applicable to income taxes will apply to both the nonrefundable and the refundable portions of the child credit. (This will reverse the conclusion reached by Internal Revenue Service Chief Counsel Memorandum 199948027 interpreting present law.)

Roth IRAs.—Code section 3405 provides for withholding with respect to designated distributions from certain tax-favored arrangements, including IRAs. In general, section 3405(e)(1)(B)(ii) excludes from the definition of a designated distribution the portion of any distribution which it is reasonable to believe is excludable from gross income. However, all distributions from IRAs are treated as includible in income. The exception was consistent with prior law when all IRA distributions were taxable, but does not account for the tax-free nature of certain Roth IRA distributions. The provision extends the exception to Roth IRAs.

Capital gain election.—The provision provides that an election to recognize gain or loss made pursuant to section 311(e) of the Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 does not apply to assets disposed of in a recognition transaction within one year of the date the election would otherwise have been effective. Thus, for example, if an asset is sold in 2001, no election may be made with respect to that asset. In addition, it is clarified that the deemed sale and repurchase by reason of the election is not taken into account in applying the wash sale rules of section 1091.

Straight-line depreciation under AMT.—The provision clarifies that the Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 did not change the requirement that the straight-line method of depreciation be used in computing the alternative minimum tax ("AMT") depreciation allowance for section 1250 property. It is arguable that the changes made by that Act could be read as inadvertently allowing accelerated depreciation under the AMT for section 1250 property which is allowed accelerated depreciation under the regular tax.

Transportation benefits.—Under present law, salary reduction amounts are generally treated as compensation for purposes of the limits on contributions and benefits under qualified plans. In addition, an employer can elect whether or not to include such amounts for nondiscrimination testing purposes. The IRS Reform Act permitted employers to offer a cash option in lieu of qualified transportation benefits. The provision treats salary reduction amounts used for qualified transportation benefits the same as other salary reduction amounts for purposes of defining compensation under the qualified plan rules.

Tax Court jurisdiction.—The Tax Court recently held that its jurisdiction pursuant to section 7436 extends only to employment status, not to the amount of employment tax in dispute (Henry Randolph Consulting v. Comm'r, 112 T.C. #1, Jan. 6, 1999). The provision provides that the Tax Court also has jurisdiction over the amount.

Amendments related to the Balanced Budget Act of 1997 (sec. 725 of the bill)

Tobacco floor stocks tax.—The provision clarifies that the floor stocks taxes imposed on January 1, 2000, and January 1, 2002, apply only to cigarettes rather than to all tobacco products. As enacted, the law could be construed as ambiguous, referring to imposition on all tobacco products but imposing liability only with respect to cigarettes.

Tobacco excise tax.—Conforming amendments are provided to two provisions to reflect the fact that the tax on cigarette papers is not imposed on "books" of papers since January 1, 2000.

Coordination of trade rules and tobacco excise tax.—Clarification is provided that the penalty on reimporting cigarettes other than for return to a manufacturer (effective January 1, 2000) does not apply to cigarettes re-imported by individuals to the extent those cigarettes can be entered into the U.S. without duty or tax under the Harmonized Tariff Schedule.

Amendment related to the Small Business Job Protection Act of 1996 (sec. 726 of the bill)

Work opportunity tax credit.—Section 51(d)(2) refers to eligibility for the work opportunity tax credit with respect to certain welfare recipients without taking into account the enactment of the temporary assistance for needy families ("TANF") program. The provisions conform references in the work opportunity tax credit to the operation of TANF.

Electing small business trusts holding S corporation stock.—The provision allows an electing small business trust (sec. 1361(e)) to have an organization described in section 170(c)(1) (relating to State and local governments) as a beneficiary if the organization holds a contingent interest and is not a potential current beneficiary.

Definition of lump-sum distribution.—Section 1401(b) of the Small Business Job Protection Act of 1996 Act repealed 5-year averaging for lump-sum distributions. The definition of lump-sum distribution was preserved for other provisions, primarily those relating to NUA in employer securities. The definition was moved from section 402(d)(4)(A) to section 402(e)(4)(D)(i). This definition included the following sentence: "A distribution of an annuity contract from a trust or annuity plan referred to in the first sentence of this subparagraph shall be treated as a lump sum distribution." The provision adds this language back into the definition of lump-sum distribution. The sentence is relevant to section 401(k)(10)(B), which permits certain distributions if made as a "lump-sum distribution."

IRAs for nonworking spouses.—Section 1427 of the Small Business Job Protection Act of 1996 expanded the IRA deduction for nonworking spouses. The maximum permitted IRA contributions is generally limited by the individual's earned income. However, under present law, it is possible for a nonworking (or lesser earning) spouse to make IRA contributions in excess of the couple's combined earned income. The following example illustrates present law.

Example: Suppose H and W retire in the middle of January, 1999. In that year, H earns $1,000 and W earns $500. Both are active participants in an employer-sponsored retirement plan. Their modified AGI is $60,000. They make no Roth IRA contributions. Before application of the income phase-out rules, the maximum deductible IRA contribution that H can make is $1,000 (sec. 219(b)(1)). After application of the income phase-out rule in section 219(g), H's maximum contribution is $200, and H contributes that amount to an IRA. Under 408(o)(2)(B), H can make nondeductible contributions of $800 ($1,000 − $200).

W's maximum permitted deductible contribution under section 219(c)(1)(B), before the income phase-out, is $1,300 (the sum of H and W's earned income ($1,500), less H's deductible IRA contribution ($200)). Under the income phase-out, W's deductible contribution is limited to $200, and she can make a nondeductible contribution of $1,000 ($1,300 − $200).

The total permitted contributions for H and W are $2,300 ($1,000 for H plus $1,300 for W). The combined contribution should be limited to $1,500, their combined earned income.

The provision provides that the contributions for the spouse with the lesser income cannot exceed the combined earned income of the spouses.

Amendment related to the Revenue Reconciliation Act of 1990 (sec. 727 of the bill)

Qualified tertiary injectant expenses.—The provision clarifies that the enhanced oil recovery credit (sec. 43) applies with respect to qualified tertiary injectant expenses described in section 193(b) that are paid or incurred in connection with a qualified enhanced oil recovery project, and that are deductible for the taxable year (regardless of the provision allowing the deduction). Purchased and self-produced injectants are treated the same for purposes of the section 43 credit.

Amendments to other acts (sec. 728 of the bill)

Insurance.—The legislative history of section 7702A(a) (enacted in the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988) indicated that if a life insurance contract became a modified endowment contract ("MEC"), then the MEC status could not be eliminated by exchanging the MEC for another contract. Section 7702A(a)((2), however, arguably might be read to allow a policyholder to exchange a MEC for a contract that does not fail the 7-pay test of section 7702A(b), then exchange the second contract for a third contract, which would not literally have been received in exchange for a contract that failed to meet the 7–pay test. The provision clarifies section 7702A(a)(2) to correspond to the legislative history, effective as if enacted with the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 (generally, for contracts entered into on or after June 21, 1988).

Insurance.—Under section 7702A, if a life insurance contract that is not a modified endowment contract is actually or deemed exchanged for a new life insurance contract, then the 7–pay limit under the new contract is first be computed without reference to the premium paid using the cash surrender value of the old contract, and then would be reduced by 1/7 of the premium paid taking into account the cash surrender value of the old contract. For example, if the old contract had a cash surrender value of $14,000 and the 7-pay premium on the new contract would equal $10,000 per year but for the fact that there was an exchange, the 7–pay premium on the new contract would equal $8,000 ($10,000–$14,000/7). However, section 7702A(c)(3)(A) arguably might be read to suggest that if the cash surrender value on the new contract was $0 in the first two years (due to surrender charges), then the 7–pay premium might be $10,000 in this example, unintentionally permitting policyholders to engage in a series of "material changes" to circumvent the premium limitations in section 7702A. The provision clarifies section 7702A(c)(3)(A) to refer to the cash surrender value of the old contract, effective as if enacted with the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 (generally, for contracts entered into on or after June 21, 1988).

Worthless securities.—Section 165(g)(3) provides a special rule for worthless securities of an affiliated corporation. The test for affiliation in section 165(g)(3)(A) is the 80–percent vote test for affiliated groups under section 1504(a) that was in effect prior to 1984. When section 1504(a) was amended in the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 to adopt the vote and value test of present law, no corresponding change was made to section 165(g)(3)(A), even though the tests had been identical until then. The provision conforms the affiliation test of section 165(g)(3)(A) to the test in section 1504(a)(2), effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1984.

Exception for certain annuities under OID rules.—The Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 expanded the prior-law rules for inclusion in income of original issue discount ("OID") on debt instruments. That Act provided an exception from the definition of a debt instrument for certain annuity contracts, including any annuity contract to which section 72 applies and that is issued by an insurance company subject to tax under subchapter L of the Code (and meets certain other requirements) (sec. 1275(a)(1)(B)(ii)). The provision clarifies that an annuity contract otherwise meeting the applicable requirements also comes within the exception of section 1275(a)(1)(B)(ii) if it is issued by an entity described in section 501(c) and exempt from tax under section 501(a), that would be subject to tax as an insurance company under subchapter L if it were not exempt under section 501(a). For example, the provision clarifies that an annuity contract otherwise meeting the requirements that is issued by a fraternal beneficiary society which is exempt from Federal income tax under section 501(a), and which is described in section 501(c)(8), comes within the exception under section 1275(a)(1)(B)(ii). However, an annuity contract issued by a foreign insurer that is not subject to tax in the U.S. as an insurance company under subchapter L with respect to the contract does not come within the exception under section 1275(a)(1)(B)(ii). It is understood that charitable gift annuities (as defined in sec. 501(m)) depend (in whole or in substantial part) on the life expectancy of one or more individuals, and thus come within the exception under section 1275(a)(1)(B)(i). The provision is effective as if included with section 41 of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 (i.e., for taxable years ending after July 18, 1984).

Losses from section 1256 contracts.—Section 6411 allows tentative refunds for NOL carrybacks, business credit carrybacks and, for corporations only, capital loss carrybacks. Individuals normally cannot carry back a capital loss. However, section 1212(c) does allow a carryback of section 1256 losses, if elected by the taxpayer. The provision amends section 6411(a) by including a reference to section 1212(c), effective as if included with section 504 of the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981.

Highway Trust Fund.—The provision modifies administrative procedures of the Highway Trust Fund to conform to the 1993 repeal of the special tax rate applicable to ethanol prior to 1994. The provision is effective for taxes received after the date of enactment. This ensures that retroactive adjustments, if any, are not made to the Highway Trust Fund.

Conforming amendment for expenditures from Vaccine Injury Compensation Trust Fund.—The provision makes a conforming amendment to the expenditure purposes of the Vaccine Injury Compensation Trust Fund to enable certain payments to be made from the Trust Fund.

Clerical changes (sec. 729 of the bill)

The bill makes a number of clerical and typographical amendments to the Code.

EXCLUSION FROM PAYGO SCORECARD

PRESENT LAW

Under the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, as amended, tax reduction legislation is subject to a "pay-as-you-go" (PAYGO) requirement. The PAYGO system tracks legislation that may increase budget deficits using a "scorecard" (estimated by the Office of Management and Budget). Any revenue loss would have to be offset by other revenue increases, reductions in direct spending or a combination of the two.

HOUSE BILL

No provision.

SENATE AMENDMENT

No provision.

CONFERENCE AGREEMENT

The conference agreement provides that, upon enactment of the Act, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget shall not make any estimate of the changes in direct spending outlays and receipts under section 252(d) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 resulting from the enactment of the Act.

TAX COMPLEXITY ANALYSIS

The following tax complexity analysis is provided pursuant to section 4022(b) of the Internal Revenue Service Reform and Restructuring Act of 1998, which requires the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation (in consultation with the Internal Revenue Service ("IRS") and the Treasury Department) to provide a complexity analysis of tax legislation reported by the House Committee on Ways and Means, the Senate Committee on Finance, or a Conference Report containing tax provisions. The complexity analysis is required to report on the complexity and administrative issues raised by provisions that directly or indirectly amend the Internal Revenue Code and that have widespread applicability to individuals or small businesses. For each such provision identified by the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation, a summary description of the provision is provided, along with an estimate of the number of affected taxpayers, and a discussion regarding the relevant complexity and administrative issues. Time constraints prevented the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation from consulting with the IRS regarding the provisions in the conference agreement that have widespread applicability.

1. Increase deduction for business meals (sec. 204 of the conference agreement)

Summary description of provision

The provision increases the deductible percentage of business meal (food and beverage) expenses to 70 percent, effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000.

Number of affected taxpayers

It is estimated that almost all small businesses will be affected by the provision.

Discussion

Because the provision increases the percentage deduction only with respect to meals and not entertainment, small businesses may have to keep additional records to distinguish between the two types of expenditures. The provision may lead to additional disputes between small businesses and the IRS regarding the nature of an expenditure, particularly in business situations where the meal and entertainment is provided as a package for a single price. No new regulatory changes would be needed to implement the provision (although a conforming change to regulations to reflect the increasing percentage would be appropriate).

2. Accelerate 100-percent self-employed health insurance deduction (sec. 301 of the conference agreement)

Summary description of provision

The provision accelerates the increase in the deduction for health insurance expenses of self-employed individuals so that the deduction is 100 percent in years beginning after December 31, 2000.

Number of affected taxpayers

It is estimated that the provision will affect three million small businesses.

Discussion

It is not anticipated that individuals or small businesses will need to keep additional records due to the provision. It is not anticipated that the provision will result in an increase in disputes with the IRS, or increase tax return preparation costs. It is not anticipated that regulatory guidance will be needed to implement the provision. Accelerating the 100-percent deduction may simplify the preparation of tax returns for self-employed individuals, because they will no longer need to keep track of the percent of health insurance expenses that are deductible, and will need to perform one less calculation.

"(II) provide for the collection of data with respect to the costs of a new medical service or technology described in subclause (I) for a period of not less than two years and not more than three years beginning on the date on which an inpatient hospital code is issued with respect to the service or technology;

"(III) subject to paragraph (4)(C)(iii), provide for additional payment to be made under this subsection with respect to discharges involving a new medical service or technology described in subclause (I) that occur during the period described in subclause (II) in an amount that adequately reflects the estimated average cost of such service or technology; and

"(ii) Such groups—

"(I) shall not be based on the costs associated with a specific new medical service or technology; but

The provision would specify two new payment rates for mammographies that utilize advanced new technology for the period April 1, 2001 to December 21, 2001. Payment for technologies that directly take digital images would equal 150% of what would otherwise be paid for a bilateral diagnostic mammography. For technologies that convert standard film images to digital form, an additional payment of fifteen dollars would be authorized. The Secretary would be required to determine whether a new code is required for tests furnished after 2001.

Section 105. Coverage of medical nutrition therapy services for beneficiaries with diabetes or a renal disease

The provision would establish, effective January 1, 2002, Medicare coverage for medical nutrition therapy services for beneficiaries who have diabetes or a renal disease. Medical nutrition therapy services would be defined as nutritional diagnostic, therapy and counseling services for the purpose of disease management which are furnished by a registered dietician or nutrition professional, pursuant to a referral by a physician. The provision would specify that the amount paid for medical nutrition therapy services would equal the lesser of the actual charge for the service or 85% of the amount that would be paid under the physician fee schedule if such services were provided by a physician. Assignment would be required for all claims. The Secretary would be required to submit a report to Congress that contains an evaluation of the effectiveness of services furnished under this provision.

Subtitle B—Other Beneficiary Improvements

Section 111. Acceleration of reduction of beneficiary copayment for hospital outpatient hospital outpatient department services

Effective January 1, 2001, the provision would modify current law by limiting the amount of a beneficiary's copayment for a procedure in a hospital outpatient department to the hospital inpatient deductible applicable in that year.

In addition, starting in January, 2001, the provision would require the Secretary of HHS to reduce the effective copayment rate for outpatient services to a maximum rate of 60% and then gradually reduce the effective coinsurance rate in 5 percentage point intervals from 2002 through 2006 until the maximum rate is 40% in 2006. As stated in BBA 97, hospitals may waive any increase in coinsurance that may have arisen from the implementation of the outpatient prospective payment system (PPS).

The Comptroller General would be required to work with the National Association of Insurance Commissioners (NAIC) to evaluate the extent to which premiums for supplemental policies reflect the acceleration of the reduction in beneficiary coinsurance for hospital outpatient services and result in savings to beneficiaries and to report to the Congress by April 1, 2004.

Section 112. Preservation of coverage of drugs and biologicals under part B of the medicare program

The provision would clarify policy with regard to coverage of drugs, provided incident to physicians services, that cannot be self-administered. The provision would specify that such drugs are covered when they are not usually self-administered by the patient.

Section 113. Elimination of time limitation on Medicare benefits for immunosuppressive drugs

The provision would eliminate the current time limitations on the coverage of immunosuppressive drugs for beneficiaries who have received a covered organ transplant. The provision would apply to drugs furnished, on or after the date enactment.

Section 114. Imposition of balanced billing limits on prescription drugs

The provision would specify that payment for drugs under Part B must be made on the basis of assignment.

Subtitle C—Demonstration Projects and Studies

Section 121. Demonstration project for disease management for severely chronically ill Medicare beneficiaries

The Secretary would be required to conduct a demonstration project to illustrate the impact on costs and health outcomes of applying disease management to Medicare beneficiaries with diagnosed, advanced-stage congestive heart failure, diabetes, or coronary heart disease. Up to 30,000 beneficiaries would be able to enroll, on a voluntary basis, for disease management services related to their chronic health condition. In addition, contractors providing disease management services would be responsible for providing beneficiaries enrolled in the project with prescription drugs.

Section 122. Cancer prevention and treatment demonstration for ethnic and racial minorities

The provision would require the Secretary to conduct demonstration projects for the purpose of developing models and evaluating methods that improve the quality of cancer prevention services, improve clinical outcomes, eliminate disparities in the rate of preventive screening measures, and promote collaboration with community-based organizations for ethnic and racial minorities.

Section 123. Study on Medicare coverage of routine thyroid screening

The provision would require the Secretary to request the National Academy of Sciences, and as appropriate in conjunction with the United States Preventive Services Task Force, to analyze the addition of routine thyroid screening under Medicare. The analysis would consider the short term and long term benefits, and cost to Medicare, of adding such coverage for some or all beneficiaries.

Section 124. MedPAC study on consumer coalitions

The provision would require MedPAC to conduct a study that examines the use of consumer coalitions in the marketing of Medicare+Choice plans. A consumer coalition would be defined as a non-profit community-based organization that provides information to beneficiaries about their health options under Medicare and negotiates with Medicare+Choice plans on benefits and premiums for beneficiaries who are members of the coalition or otherwise affiliated with it.

Section 125. Study on limitation on state payment for medicare cost-sharing affecting access to services for qualified medicare beneficiaries

The provision would require the Secretary of HHS to conduct a study to determine if access to certain services (including mental health services) has been affected by a specific provision in law. That provision specifies that states are not required to pay Medicare cost-sharing charges for QMBs to the extent these payments would result in a total payment in excess of the Medicaid level.

Section 126. Institute of Medicine study on waiver of 24-month waiting period for Medicare disability eligibility for amyotrophic lateral sclerosis (ALS) and other devastating diseases

The provision would provide for an Institute of Medicine study that examines the appropriateness of waiving the 24-month waiting period for Medicare disability eligibility for an individual medically determined to have amyotrophic lateral sclerosis (ALS) or an other disease that is as rapidly debilitating.

Section 127. Studies on preventive interventions in primary care for older Americans

The provision would require the Secretary, acting through the United States Preventive Services Task Force, to conduct a series of studies designed to identify preventive interventions in primary care for older Americans.

Section 128. MedPAC study and report on Medicare coverage of cardiac and pulmonary rehabilitation and therapy services

The provision would require MedPAC to conduct a study on coverage of cardiac and pulmonary rehabilitation therapy services under Medicare.

TITLE II—RURAL HEALTH CARE IMPROVEMENTS

Subtitle A—Critical Access Hospital Provisions

Section 201. Clarification of no beneficiary cost-sharing for clinical diagnostic laboratory tests furnished by critical access hospitals

Effective for services furnished on or after the enactment of BBRA99, Medicare beneficiaries would not be liable for any coinsurance, deductible, copayment, or other cost sharing amount with respect to clinical diagnostic laboratory services furnished as an outpatient critical access hospital (CAH) service. Conforming changes that clarify that CAHs are reimbursed on a reasonable cost basis for outpatient clinical diagnostic laboratory services are also included.

Section 202. Assistance with fee schedule payment for professional services under all-inclusive rate

Effective for items and services furnished on or after April 1, 2001, Medicare would pay a CAH for outpatient services based on reasonable costs or, at the election of an entity, would pay the CAH a facility fee based on reasonable costs plus an amount based on 115% of Medicare's fee schedule for professional services.

Section 203. Exemption of critical access hospital swing beds from SNF PPS

Swing beds in critical access hospitals (CAHs) would be exempt from the SNF prospective payment system. CAHs would be paid for covered SNF services on a reasonable cost basis.

Section 204. Payment in critical access hospitals for emergency room on-call physicians

When determining the allowable, reasonable cost of outpatient CAH services, the Secretary would recognize amounts for the compensation and related costs for on-call emergency room physicians who are not present on the premises, are not otherwise furnishing services, and are not on-call at any other provider or facility. The Secretary would define the reasonable payment amounts and the meaning of the term "on-call." The provision would be effective for cost reporting periods beginning on or after October 1, 2001.

Section 205. Treatment of ambulance services furnished by certain critical access hospitals

Ambulance services provided by a critical access hospital (CAH) or provided by an entity that is owned or operated by a CAH would be paid on a reasonable cost basis if the CAH or entity is the only provider or supplier of ambulance services that is located within a 35-mile drive of the CAH. The provision would be effective for cost reporting periods beginning on or after implementation of the fee schedule.

Section 206. GAO study on certain eligibility requirements for critical access hospitals

Within one year of enactment, GAO would be required to conduct a study on the eligibility requirements for critical access hospitals (CAHs) with respect to limitations on average length of stay and number of beds, including an analysis of the feasibility of having a distinct part unit as part of a CAH and the effect of seasonal variations in CAH eligibility requirements. GAO also would be required to analyze the effect of seasonal variations in patient admissions on critical access hospital eligibility requirements with respect to limits on average annual length of stay and number of beds.

Subtitle B—Other Rural Hospitals Provisions

Section 211. Equitable treatment for rural disproportionate share hospitals

For discharges occurring on or after April 1, 2001, all hospitals would be eligible to receive DSH payments when their DSH percentage (threshold amount) exceeds 15%. The DSH payment formulas for sole community hospitals (SCHs), rural referral centers (RRCs), rural hospitals that are both SCHs and RRCs, small rural hospitals and urban hospitals with less than 100 beds would be modified.

Section 212. Option to base eligibility for Medicare dependent, small rural hospital program on discharges during 2 of the 3 most recent audited cost reporting periods

An otherwise qualifying small rural hospital would be able to be classified as an MDH if at least 60% of its days or discharges were attributable to Medicare Part A beneficiaries in at least two of the three most recent audited cost reporting periods for which the Secretary has a settled cost report.

Section 213. Extension of option to use rebased target amounts to all sole community hospitals

Any SCH would be able to elect payment based on hospital specific, updated FY1996 costs if this target amount resulted in higher Medicare payments. There would be a transition period with Medicare payment based completely on updated FY1996 hospital specific costs for discharges occurring after FY2003.

Section 214. MedPAC analysis of impact of volume on per unit cost of rural hospitals with psychiatric units

MedPAC would be required to report on the impact of volume on the per unit cost of rural hospitals with psychiatric units and include in its report a recommendation on whether special treatment is warranted.

Subtitle C—Other Rural Provisions

Section 221. Assistance for providers of ambulance services in rural areas

The provision would make additional payments to providers of ground ambulance services for trips, originating in rural areas, that are greater than 17 miles and up to 50 miles. The payments would be made for services furnished on or after implementation of the fee schedule and before January 1, 2004. The provision would require the Comptroller General to conduct a study to examine both the costs of efficiently providing ambulance services for trips originating in rural areas and the means by which rural areas with low population densities can be identified for the purpose of designating areas in which the costs of ambulance services would be expected to be higher. The Comptroller General would submit a report to Congress by June 30, 2002 on the results of the study, together with recommendations on steps that should be taken to assure access to ambulance services for trips originating in rural areas. The Secretary would be required to take these findings into account when establishing the fee schedule, beginning with 2004.

Section 222. Payment for certain physician assistant services

This provision would give permanent authority to physician assistants who owned rural health clinics that lost their designation as such to bill Medicare directly.

Section 223. Expansion of Medicare payment for telehealth services

The provision would establish revised payment provisions, effective no later than July 1, 2001, for services that are provided via a telecommunications system by a physician or practitioner to an eligible beneficiary in a rural area. The Secretary would be required to make payments for telehealth services to the physician or practitioner at the distant site in an amount equal to the amount that would have been paid to such physician or practitioner if the service had been furnished to the beneficiary without the use of a telecommunications system. A facility fee would be paid to the originating site. Originating sites would include a physician or practitioner office, a critical access hospital, a rural health clinic, a Federally qualified health center or a hospital. The Secretary would be required to conduct a study, and submit recommendations to Congress, that identify additional settings, sites, practitioners and geographic areas that would be appropriate for telehealth services. Entities participating in Federal demonstration projects approved by, or receiving funding from, the Secretary as of December 31, 2000 would be qualified sites.

Section 224. Expanding Access to rural health clinics

All hospitals of less than 50 beds that own rural health clinics would be exempt from the per visit limit.

Section 225. MedPAC study on low-volume, isolated rural health providers

MedPAC would be required to study the effect of low patient and procedure volume on the financial status and Medicare payment methods for hospital outpatient services, ambulance services, hospital inpatient services, skilled nursing facility services, and home health services in isolated rural health care providers.

TITLE III—PROVISIONS RELATING TO PART A

Subtitle A—Inpatient Hospital Services

Section 301. Revision of acute care hospital payment update for 2001

All hospitals would receive the full market basket index (MBI) as an update for FY2001. In order to implement this increase for hospitals other than sole community hospitals (SCH), those hospitals would receive the MBI minus 1.1 percentage points (the current statutory provision) for discharges occurring on or after October 1, 2000 and before April 1 2001; these non-SCH hospitals would receive the MBI plus 1.1 percentage points for discharges occurring on or after April 1, 2001 and before October 1, 2001. For FY2002 and FY2003, hospitals would receive the MBI minus .55 percentage points. For FY2004 and subsequently, hospitals would receive the MBI.

The Secretary is directed to consider the prices of blood and blood products purchased by hospitals in the next rebasing and revision of the hospital market basket to determine whether those prices are adequately reflected in the market basket index. MedPAC is directed to conduct a study on increased hospital costs attributable to complying with new blood safety measures and providing such services using new technologies among other issues.

For discharges occurring on or after October 1, 2001, the Secretary would be able to adjust the standardized amount in future fiscal years to correct for changes in the aggregate Medicare payments caused by adjustments to the DRG weighting factors in a previous fiscal year (or estimates that such adjustments for a future fiscal year) that did not take into account coding improvements or changes in discharge classifications and did not accurately represent increases in the resource intensity of patients treated by PPS hospitals.

Section 302. Additional modification in transition for indirect medical education (IME) percentage adjustment

Teaching hospitals would receive 6.25% IME payment adjustment (for each 10% increase in teaching intensity) for discharges occurring on or after October 1, 2000 and before April 1, 2001. The IME adjustment would increase to 6.75% for discharges on or after April 1, 2001 and before October 1, 2001, for an average of 6.5% for FY2001. The IME adjustment would be 6.375% in FY2002 and 5.5% in FY2003 and in subsequent years.

Section 303. Decrease in reductions for disproportionate share hospital (DSH) payments

Reductions in the DSH payment formula amounts would be 2% in FY2001, 3% in FY2002, and 0% in FY2003 and subsequently. To implement the FY2001 provision, DSH amounts for discharges occurring on or after October 1, 2000 and before April 1, 2001, would be reduced by 3% which was the reduction in effect prior to enactment of this provision. DSH amounts for discharges occurring on or after April 1, 2001 and before October 1, 2001 would be reduced by only 1 percentage point.

Section 304. Wage index improvements

For FY2001 or any fiscal year thereafter, a Medicare Geographic Classification Review Board (MGCRB) decision to reclassify a prospective payment system hospital for use of a different area's wage index would be effective for 3 fiscal years. The Secretary would establish procedures whereby a hospital could elect to terminate this reclassification decision before the end of such period. For FY2003 and subsequently, MGCRB would base any comparison of the average hourly wage of the hospital with the average hourly wage for hospitals in the area using data from each of the two immediately preceding surveys as well as data from the most recently published hospital wage survey.

The Secretary would establish a process which would first be available for discharges occurring on or after October 1, 2001 where a single wage index would be computed for all geographic areas in the state. If the Secretary applies a statewide geographic index, an application by an individual hospital would not be considered. The Secretary would also collect occupational data every three years in order to construct an occupational mix adjustment for the hospital area wage index. The first complete data collection effort would occur no later than September 30, 2003 for application beginning October 1, 2004.

Section 305. Payment for inpatient services in rehabilitation hospitals

Total payments for rehabilitation hospitals in FY2002 would equal the amounts of payments that would have been made if the rehabilitation prospective payment system (PPS) had not been enacted. A rehabilitation facility would be able to make a one-time election before the start of the PPS to be paid based on a fully phased-in PPS rate.

Section 306. Payment for inpatient services of psychiatric hospitals

The provision would increase the incentive payments for psychiatric hospitals and distinct part units to 3% for cost reporting periods beginning on or after October 1, 2000.

Section 307. Payment for inpatient services of long-term care hospitals

For cost reporting periods beginning during FY 2001, long term hospitals would have the national cap increased by 2% and the target amount increased by 25%. Neither these payments nor the increased bonus payments provided by BBRA 99 would be factored into the development of the prospective payment system (PPS) for long term hospitals. When developing the PPS for inpatient long term hospitals, the Secretary would be required to examine the feasibility and impact of basing payment on the existing (or refined) acute hospital DRGs and using the most recently available hospital discharge data. If the Secretary is unable to implement a long term hospital PPS by October 1, 2002, the Secretary would be required to implement a PPS for these hospitals using the existing acute hospital DRGs that have been modified where feasible.

Subtitle B—Adjustments to PPS Payments for Skilled Nursing Facilities

Section 311. Elimination of reduction in skilled nursing facility (SNF) market basket update in 2001

The provision would modify the schedule and rates according to which federal per diem payments are updated. In FY 2002 and FY 2003 the updates would be the market basket index increase minus 0.5 percentage point. The update rate for the period October 1, 2000, through March 31, 2001, would be the market basket index increase minus 1 percentage point; the update rate for the period April 1, 2001, through September 30, 2001, would be the market basket index increase plus one percentage point. Temporary increases in the federal per diem rates provided by BBRA 99 would be in addition to the increases in this provision. By July 1, 2002, the Comptroller General would be required to submit a report to Congress on the adequacy of Medicare payments to SNFs, taking into account the role of private payers, medicaid, and case mix on the financial performance of SNFs and including an analysis, by RUG classification, of the number and characteristics of such facilities. By January 1, 2005, the Secretary would be required to submit a report to Congress on alternatives for classification of SNF patients.

Section 312. Increase in nursing component of PPS federal rate

The provision would increase the nursing component of each RUG by 16.66 percent over current law for SNF care furnished after April 1, 2001, and before October 1, 2002. Skilled nursing facilities would be required to post nurse staffing information daily for each shift in the facility.

The Comptroller General would be required to conduct an audit of nurse staffing ratios in a sample of SNFs and to report to Congress by August 1, 2002, on the results of the audit of nurse staffing ratios and recommend whether the additional 16.66 percent payment should be continued.

Section 313. Application of SNF consolidated billing requirement limited to part A covered stays

Effective January 1, 2001, the provision would limit the current law consolidated billing requirement to services and items furnished to SNF residents in a Medicare part A covered stay and to therapy services furnished in part A and part B covered stays.

The Inspector General of HHS would be required to monitor part B payments to SNFs on behalf of residents who are not in a part A covered stay.

Section 314. Adjustment of rehabilitation RUGS to correct anomaly in payment rates

Effective for skilled nursing facility (SNF) services furnished on or after April 1, 2002, the provision would increase by 6.7 percent certain federal per diem payments to ensure that Medicare payments for SNF residents with "ultra high" and "high" rehabilitation therapy needs are appropriate in relation to payments for residents needing "medium" or "low" levels of therapy. The 20 percent additional payment that was provided in BBRA 99 for certain RUGS is removed to make this provision budget neutral.

The Inspector General of HHS would be required to review and report to Congress by October 1, 2001, regarding whether the RUG payment structure as in effect under the BBRA 99 includes incentives for the delivery of inadequate care.

Section 315. Establishment of process for geographic reclassification

The provision would permit the Secretary to establish a process for geographic reclassification of skilled nursing facilities based upon the method used for inpatient hospitals. The Secretary may implement the process upon completion of the data collection necessary to calculate an area wage index for workers in skilled nursing facilities.

Subtitle C—Hospice Care

Section 321. Full market basket increase for 2001

The provision would modify update procedures for Medicare daily payment rates for hospice care. It would provide an increase in FY 2001 equal to the full increase in the market basket index. (The rates would be lower in the period October 1, 2000, through March 21, 2001, and higher in the period April 1, 2001, through September 30, 2001.) For FY 2002, payments would be updated by the market basket index increase minus .25 percentage point. The temporary increase in payment rates provided in BBRA 99 for FY 2001 and FY 2002 (.5 percent and .75 percent, respectively) would be included in the base on which updates are computed.

Section 322. Clarification of physician certification

Effective for certifications of terminal illness made on or after the date of enactment, the provision would modify current law to specify that the physician's or hospice medical director's certification of terminal illness would be based on his/her clinical judgment regarding the normal course of the individual's illness. The Secretary would be required to study and report to Congress within 2 years of enactment on the appropriateness of certification of terminally ill individuals and the effect of this provision on such certification.

Section 323. MedPAC report on access to, and use of, hospice benefit

The provision would require MedPAC to examine the factors affecting the use of Medicare hospice benefits, including delay of entry into the hospice program and urban and rural differences in utilization rates. The provision would require a report on the study to be submitted to Congress 18 months after enactment.

Section 331. Relief From Medicare Part A late enrollment penalty for group buy-in for state and local retirees

The provision would exempt certain state and local retirees, retiring prior to January 1, 2002, from the Part A delayed enrollment penalties. These would be groups of persons for whom the state or local government elected to pay the delayed Part A enrollment penalty for life. The amount of the delayed enrollment penalty which would otherwise be assessed would be reduced by an amount equal to the total amount of Medicare payroll taxes paid by the employee and the employer on behalf of the employee.

Section 332. Posting of information on nursing facility staffing.

The provision would require skilled nursing facilities to post nurse staffing information daily for each shift in the facility.

Title IV—Provisions Relating to Part B

Subtitle A—Hospital Outpatient Services

Section 401. Revision of hospital outpatient PPS payment update

Effective as if enacted with the BBRA 99, the provision would modify the current law update rates applicable to the hospital outpatient PPS by providing in FY 2001 an update equal to the full rate of increase in the market basket index. As under current law, the increase in FY 2002 would be the market basket index increase minus one percentage point.

If the Secretary determines that updates to the adjustment factor used to convert the relative utilization weights under the PPS into payment amounts have, or are likely to, result in hospitals' changing their coding or classification of covered services, thereby changing aggregate payments, the Secretary would be authorized to adjust the conversion factor in later years to eliminate the effect of coding or classification changes.

Section 402. Clarifying process and standards for determining eligibility of devices for pass-through payments under hospital outpatient PPS

The provision would modify the procedures and standards by which certain medical devices are categorized and determined eligible for pass-through payments under the PPS. Through public rule-making procedures, the Secretary would be required to establish criteria for defining special payment categories under the PPS for new medical devices. The Secretary would be required to promulgate, through the use of a program memorandum, initial categories that would encompass each of the individual devices that the Secretary had designated as qualifying for the pass-through payments to date. In addition, similar devices not so designated because they were payable under Medicare prior to December 31, 1996, would also be included in initial categories. The Secretary would be required to create additional new categories in the future to accommodate new technologies meeting the "not insignificant cost" test established in BBRA 99.

Once the categories were established, pass-through payments currently authorized under section 1833(t)(b) of the Social Security Act would proceed on a category-specific, rather than device-specific basis. These payments would be designated as "category-based pass-through payments." These payments would be continued to be made for the 2 to 3 years payment period originally specified in BBRA 99, and, for each given category, would begin when the first such payment is made for any device included in a specified category. At the conclusion of this transitional payment period, categories would sunset and payment for the device would be included in the underlying PPS payment for the related service.

Section 403. Application of OPD PPS transitional corridor payments to certain hospitals that did not submit a 1996 cost report

Effective as if enacted with BBRA 99, the provision would modify current law as enacted in BBA 99 to enable all hospitals, not just those hospitals filing 1996 cost reports, to be eligible for transitional payments under the PPS.

Section 404. Application of rules for determining provider-based status for certain entities

The provision would grandfather existing arrangements whereby certain entities (such as outpatient clinics, skilled nursing facilities, etc.) are considered "provider-based" entities, meaning they are affiliated financially and clinically with a main hospital. Existing provider-based status designations would continue for two years beginning October 1, 2000. If a facility or organization requests approval for provider-based status during the period October 1, 2000, through September 31, 2002, it could not be treated as if it did not have such status during the period of time the determination is pending. In making such a status determination on or after October 1, 2000, HCFA would treat the applicant as satisfying any requirements or standards for geographic location if it satisfied geographic location requirements in regulations or is located not more than 35 miles from the main campus of the hospital.

An applicant facility or organization would be treated as satisfying all requirements for provider-based status if it is owned or operated by a unit of State or local government or is a public or private nonprofit corporation that is formally granted governmental powers by a unit of State or local government, or is a private hospital that, under contract, serves certain low income households or has a certain disproportionate share adjustment.

These provisions are in effect during a two-year period beginning on October 1, 2000.

Section 405. Treatment of children's hospitals under prospective payment system

The BBRA 99 provides special "hold harmless" payments to ensure that cancer hospitals would receive no less under the hospital outpatient PPS than they would have received, in aggregate, under the "pre-BBA" system, that is, the pre-PPS payment system. Effective as if included in the BBRA 99, the provision would extend this hold harmless protection to children's hospitals.

Sec 406. Inclusion of temperature monitored cryoablation

The provision would include temperature monitored cryoablation as part of the transitional pass-through for certain medical devices, drugs, and biologicals under the hospital outpatient prospective payment system, effective April 1, 2001.

Subtitle B—Provisions Relating to Physicians Services

Section 411. GAO studies relating to physicians' services

The provision would require the GAO to conduct a study on the appropriateness of furnishing in physicians offices specialist services (such as gastrointestinal endoscopic physicians'services) which are ordinarily furnished in hospital outpatient departments. The GAO would also be required to study the refinements to the practice expense relative value units made during the transition to the resource-based system.

Section 412. Physician group practice demonstration

The provision would require the Secretary to conduct demonstration projects to test, and if proven effective, expand the use of incentives to health care groups participating under Medicare. Such incentives would be designed to encourage coordination of care furnished under Medicare Parts A and B by institutional and other providers and practitioners; to encourage investment in administrative structures and processes to encourage efficient service delivery; and to reward physicians for improving health outcomes. The Secretary would establish for each group participating in a demonstration, a base expenditure amount and an expenditure target (reflecting base expenditures adjusted for risk and expected growth rates). The Secretary would pay each group a bonus for each year equal to a portion of the savings for the year relative to the target. In addition, at such time as the Secretary had developed appropriate criteria, the Secretary would pay an additional bonus related to process and outcome improvements. Total payments under demonstrations could not exceed what the Secretary estimates would be paid in the absence of the demonstration program.

Section 413. Study on enrollment procedures for groups that retain independent contractor physicians

The provision would require the Comptroller General to conduct a study of the current Medicare enrollment process for groups that retain independent contractor physicians; particular emphasis would be placed on hospital-based physicians, such as emergency department staffing groups.

Subtitle C—Other Services

Section 421. One-year extension of moratorium on therapy caps; report on standards for supervision of physical therapy assistants

The provision would extend the moratorium on the physical therapy and occupational therapy caps for 1 year through 2002; it would also extend the requirement for focused reviews of therapy claims for the same period. The Secretary would be required to conduct a study on the implications of eliminating the "in the room" supervision requirement for Medicare payment for physical therapy assistants who are supervised by physical therapists and the implications of this requirement on the physical therapy cap.

Section 422. Update in renal dialysis composite rate

The provision would specify that the composite rate payment for renal dialysis services would be increased by 2.4% for 2001. The provision would require the Secretary to collect data and develop an end-stage renal disease (ESRD) market basket whereby the Secretary could estimate before the beginning of a year the percentage increase in costs for the mix of labor and non-labor goods and services included in the composite rate. The Secretary would report to Congress on the index together with recommendations on the appropriateness of an annual or periodic update mechanism for dialysis services. The Comptroller General would be required to study the access of beneficiaries to dialysis services. There is a hold harmless provision for facilities who received exemptions for their 2000 rates, and for facilities that had their applications denied in 2000 but resubmit them by July 1, 2001and are approved.

Section 423. Payment for ambulance services

The provision would provide for the full inflation update in ambulance payments for 2001. It would also specify that any phase-in of the ambulance fee schedule would provide for full payment of national mileage rates in states where separate mileage payments were not made prior to implementation of the fee schedule.

Section 424. Ambulatory surgical centers

The provision would delay implementation of proposed regulatory changes to the ambulatory payment classification system, which are based on 1994 cost data, until January 1, 2002. At that time, such changes would be phased in over 4 years: in the first year the payment amounts would be 25 percent of the revised rates and 75 percent of the prior system rates; in the second year payments would be 50 percent of the revised rates and 50 percent of the prior system rates, etc. The provision also requires that the revised system, based on 1999 (or later) cost data, be implemented January 1, 2003. (The phase-in of the revised system and 1994 data would end when the system with 1999 or later data was implemented.)

Section 425. Full update for durable medical equipment

The provision would modify updates to payments for durable medical equipment. For 2001, the payments for covered DME would be increased by the full increase in the consumer price index for urban consumers during the 12-month period ending June 2000. No increase would be authorized for 2002.

Section 426. Full update for orthotics and prosthetics

The provision would modify updates to payments for orthotics and prosthetics: in 2000 the rates would be increased by one percent; in 2001, the increase would be equal to the percentage increase in the consumer price index for urban consumers during the 12-month period ending with June, 2000; for 2002, payments would be increased by one percent over the prior year's amounts.

Section 427. Establishment of special payment provisions and requirements for prosthetics and certain custom fabricated orthotic items

Under the provision, certain prosthetics or custom fabricated orthotics would be covered by Medicare if furnished by a qualified practitioner and fabricated by a qualified practitioner or qualified supplier. The Secretary would be required to establish a list of such items in consultation with experts. Within one year of enactment, the Secretary would be required to promulgate regulations to provide these items, using negotiated rulemaking procedures.

Not later than 6 months from enactment, the Comptroller General would be required to submit to Congress a report on the Secretary's compliance with the Administrative Procedures Act with regard to HCFA Ruling 96-1; certain impacts of that ruling; the potential for fraud and abuse in provision of prosthetics and orthotics under special payment rules and for custom fabricated items; and the effect on Medicare and Medicaid payments if that ruling were overturned.

Section 428. Replacement of prosthetic devices and parts

The provision would authorize Medicare coverage for replacement of artificial limbs, or replacement parts for such devices, if ordered by a physician for specified reasons. Effective for items furnished on or after enactment, coverage would apply to prosthetic items 3 or more years old, and would supersede any 5-year age rules for such items under current law.

Section 429. Revised part B payment for drugs and biologicals and related services

The provision would require the Comptroller General to study and submit a report to Congress and the Secretary on the reimbursement for drugs and biologicals and for related services under Medicare; the report would include specific recommendations for revised payment methodologies. The Secretary would revise the current payment methodologies for covered drugs and biologicals and related services based on these recommendations; however, total payments under the revised methodologies could not exceed the aggregate payments the Secretary estimates would have been made under the current law. The provision would establish a temporary injunction on changes in payment rates until the Secretary reviewed the GAO report.

Section 430. Contrast enhanced diagnostic procedures under hospital prospective payment system

The provision would require the Secretary to create under that hospital outpatient PPS additional and separate groups of covered services which include procedures that utilize contrast media. The provision would take effect January 1, 2001, and separate groups of covered services which include procedures that utilize contrast media.

Section 431. Qualifications for community mental health centers

The provision would clarify the qualifications for community mental health centers providing partial hospitalization services under Medicare.

Section 432. Modification of medicare billing requirements for certain indian providers

The provision would authorize hospitals and free-standing ambulatory care clinics of the Indian Health Service to bill Medicare for services which are paid for under the physician fee schedule.

Section 433. GAO study on coverage of surgical first assisting services of certified registered nurse first assistants

The provision would require the Comptroller General to conduct a study on the effect on both the program and beneficiaries of covering surgical first assisting services of certified registered nurse first assistants.

Section 434. MedPAC study and report on medicare reimbursement for services provided by certain providers

The provision would require MedPAC to conduct a study on the appropriateness of current payment rates for services provided by a certified nurse midwife, physician assistant, nurse practitioner, and clinical nurse specialist.

Section 435. MedPAC study and report on medicare coverage of services provided by certain non-physician providers

The provision would require MedPAC to conduct a study to determine the appropriateness of Medicare coverage of the services provided by a surgical technologist, marriage counselor, pastoral care counselor, and licensed professional counselor of mental health.

Section 436. GAO study and report on the costs of emergency and medical transportation services

The provision would require the Comptroller General to conduct a study on the costs of providing emergency and medical transportation services across the range of acuity levels of conditions for which such transportation services are provided.

Section 437. GAO studies and reports on medicare payments

The provision would require the Comptroller General to conduct a study on the post-payment audit process for physicians services. The study would include the proper level of resources HCFA should devote to educating physicians regarding coding and billing, documentation requirements, and calculation of overpayments. The Comptroller General would also be required to conduct a study of the aggregate effects of regulatory, audit, oversight and paperwork burdens on physicians and other health care providers participating in Medicare.

Section 439. MedPAC study on access to outpatient pain management services

The provision would require MedPAC to conduct a study on the barriers to coverage and payment for outpatient interventional pain medicine procedures under Medicare.

TITLE V—PROVISION RELATING TO PARTS A AND B

Subtitle A—Home Health Services

Section 501. 1-Year additional delay in application of 15 percent reduction on payment limits fo home health services

The provision would require that the aggregate amount of Medicare payments to home health agencies in the second year of the PPS (FY 2002) shall equal the aggregate payments in the first year of the PPS, updated by the market basket index (MBI) increase minus 1.1 percentage points. The 15 percent reduction to aggregate PPS amounts, which, under current law, would go into effect October 1, 2001, would be delayed until October 1, 2002.

The Comptroller General (rather than the Secretary) would be required to submit, by April 1, 2002, a report analyzing the need for the 15 percent or other reduction.

If the Secretary determines that updates to the PPS system for a previous fiscal year (or estimates of such adjustments for a future fiscal year) did (or are likely to) result in a change in aggregate payments due to changes in coding or classification of beneficiaries' service needs that do not reflect real changes in case mix, effective for home health episodes concluding on or after October 1, 2001, the Secretary may adjust PPS amounts to eliminate the effect of such coding or classification changes.

Section 502. Restoration of full home health market basket update for home health services for fiscal year 2001

The provision would modify the home health PPS updates. During the period October 1, 2000, through March 31, 2001, the rates promulgated in the home health PPS regulations on July 3, 2000, would apply for 60-day episodes of care (or visits) ending in that period. For the period April 1, 2001, through September 31, 2001, those rates would be increased by 2.2 percent for 60-day episodes (or visits) ending in that time period.

Section 503. Temporary two-month extension of periodic interim payments

The provision would extend applicability of periodic interim payments provided under current law. Home health agencies that were receiving such payments as of September 30, 2000, would continue to receive them until December 1, 2000. The payments in each of November and December 2000 would equal the amount those agencies received in October 2000. The amounts would be included in the agency's last settled cost report before implementation of the PPS.

Section 504. Use of telehealth in delivery of home health services

The provision would clarify that the telecommunications provisions should not be construed as preventing a home health agency from providing a service, for which payment is made under the prospective payment system, via a telecommunications system, provided that the services do not substitute for "in-person" home health services ordered by a physician as part of a plan of care or are not considered a home health visit for purposes of eligibility or payment.

Section 505. Study on costs to home health agencies of purchasing nonroutine medical supplies

The provision would require that, not later than October 1, 2001, the Comptroller General shall submit to Congress a report regarding the variation in prices home health agencies pay for nonroutine supplies, the volume of supplies used, and what effect the variations have on the provision of services. The Secretary would be required to make recommendations on whether Medicare payment for those supplies should be made separately from the home health PPS.

Section 506. Treatment of branch offices; GAO study on supervision of home health care provided in isolated rural areas

The provision would clarify that neither time nor distance between a home health agency parent office and a branch office shall be the sole determinant of a home health agency's branch office status. The Secretary would be authorized to include forms of technology in determining "supervision" for purposes of determining a home health agency's branch office status.

Not later than January 1, 2002, the Comptroller General would be required to submit to Congress a report regarding the adequacy of supervision and quality of home health services provided by home health agency branch offices and subunits in isolated rural areas and to make recommendations on whether national standards for supervision would be appropriate in assuring quality.

Section 507. Clarification of the homebound benefit

The provision clarifies that the need for adult day care for patient's plan of treatment does not preclude appropriate coverage for home health care for other medical conditions. The provision also clarifies the ability of homebound beneficiaries to attend religious services without being disqualified from receiving home health benefits.

Subtitle B—Direct Graduate Medical Education

Section 511. Increase in floor for direct graduate medical education payments

A hospital's approved per resident amount for cost reporting periods beginning during FY2002 would not be less than 85% of the locality adjusted national average per resident amount.

Section 512. Change in distribution formula for Medicare+Choice-related nursing and allied health education costs

A hospital would receive nursing and allied health payments for Medicare managed care enrollees based on its per day cost of allied and nursing health programs and number of days attributed to Medicare enrollees in comparison to that in all other hospitals. The provision would be effective for portions of cost reporting periods occurring on or after January 1, 2001.

Subtitle C—Changes in Medicare Coverage and Appeals Process

Section 521. Revisions to medicare appeals process

The provision would modify the Medicare appeals process. Generally, initial determinations by the Secretary would be concluded no later than 45-days from the date the Secretary received a claim for benefits. Any individual dissatisfied with the initial determination would be entitled to a redetermination by the carrier or fiscal intermediary who made the initial determination. Such redetermination would be required to be completed within 30 days of a beneficiary's request. Beneficiaries could appeal the outcome of a redetermination by seeking a reconsideration. Generally, a request for a reconsideration must be initiated no later than 180 days after the date the individual receives the notice of an adverse redetermination. In addition, if contested amounts are greater than $100, an individual would be able to appeal an adverse reconsideration decision by requesting a hearing by the Secretary (first for a hearing by an administrative law judge, then in certain circumstances, for a hearing before the Department Appeals Board). If the dispute is not satisfactorily resolved through this administrative process, and if contested amounts are greater than $1,000, the individual would be able to request judicial review of the Secretary's final decision. Aggregation of claims to meet these thresholds would be permitted.

An expedited determination would be available for a beneficiary who received notice: 1) that a provider plans to terminate services and a physician certifies that failure to continue the provisions of the services is likely to place the beneficiary's health at risk; or 2) that the provider plans to discharge the beneficiary.

The Secretary would enter into 3-year contracts with at least 12 qualified independent contractors (QICs) to conduct reconsiderations. A QIC would promptly notify beneficiaries and Medicare claims processing contractors of its determinations. A beneficiary could appeal the decision of a QIC to an ALJ. In cases where the ALJ decision is not rendered within the 90-day deadline, the appealing party would be able to request a DAB hearing.

The Secretary would perform outreach activities to inform beneficiaries, providers, and suppliers of their appeal rights and procedures. The Secretary would submit to Congress an annual report including information on the number of appeals for the previous year, identifying issues that require administrative or legislative actions, and including recommendations for change as necessary. The report would also contain an analysis of the consistency of the QIC determinations as well as the cause for any identified inconsistencies.

Section 522. Revisions to medicare coverage process

The provision would clarify when and under what circumstances Medicare coverage policy could be challenged. An aggrieved party could file a complaint concerning a national coverage decision. Such complaint would be reviewed by the Department Appeals Board (DAB) of HHS. The provision would also permit an aggrieved party to file a complaint concerning a local coverage determination. In this case, the determination would be reviewed by an administrative law judge. If unsatisfied, complainants could subsequently seek review of such a local policy by the DAB. In both cases, a DAB decision would constitute final HHS action, and would be subject to judicial review. The provision would also permit an affected party to submit a request to the Secretary to issue a national coverage or noncoverage determination if one has not been issued. The Secretary would have 90 days to respond. HHS would be required to prepare an annual report on national coverage determinations.

Subtitle D—Improving Access to New Technologies

Section 531. Reimbursement improvements for new clinical laboratory tests and durable medical equipment

The provision would specify that the national limitation amount for a new clinical laboratory test would equal 100% of the national median for such test. The Secretary would be required to establish procedures that permit public consultation for coding and payment determinations for new clinical diagnostic laboratory tests and new durable medical equipment. The Secretary would be required to report to Congress on specific procedures used to adjust payments for advanced technologies; the report would include recommendations for legislative changes needed to assure fair and appropriate payments.

Section 532. Retention of HCPCS level III Codes.

The provision would extend the time for the use of local codes (known as HCPCS level III codes) through December 31, 2003; the Secretary would be required to make the codes available to the public.

Section 533. Recognition of new medical technologies under medicare inpatient hospital PPS

The Secretary would be required to submit a report to Congress no later than April 1, 2001, on potential methods for more rapidly incorporating new medical services and technologies used in the inpatient setting in the clinical coding system used with respect to payment for inpatient services. The Secretary would be required to identify the preferred methods for expediting these coding modifications in her report, and to implement such method by October 1, 2001. Additional hospital payments could be made by means of a new technology group (DRG), an add-on payment, payment adjustment or other mechanism. However, separate fee schedules for additional new technology payments would not be permitted. The Secretary would implement the new mechanism on a budget neutral basis. The total amount of projected additional payments under the mechanism would be limited to an amount not greater than the Secretary's annual estimation of the costs attributable to the introduction of new technology in the hospital sector as a whole (as estimated for purposes of the annual hospital update calculation).

Subtitle E—Other Provisions

Section 541. Increase in reimbursement for bad debt

Effective beginning with cost reports starting in FY2001, the provision would increase the percentage of the reasonable costs associated with beneficiaries' bad debt in hospitals that Medicare would reimburse to 70%.

Section 542. Treatment of certain physician pathology services under medicare

The provision would permit independent laboratories, under a grandfather arrangement to continue, for a 2-year period (2001–2002), direct billing for the technical component of pathology services provided to hospital inpatients and hospital outpatients. The Comptroller General would be required to conduct a study of the effect of these provisions on hospitals and laboratories and access of fee-for-service beneficiaries to the technical component of physician pathology services. The report would include recommendations on whether the provisions should continue after the 2-year period for either (or both) inpatient and outpatient hospital services and whether the provision should be extended to other hospitals.

Section 543. Extension of advisory opinion authority

The Office of the Inspector General's authority to issue advisory opinions to outside parties who request guidance on the applicability of the anti-kickback statute, safe harbor provisions and other OIG health care fraud and abuse sanctions would be made permanent.

Section 544. Change in annual MedPAC reporting

The provision would delay the reporting date for the MedPAC report on issues affecting the Medicare program by 15 days to June 15. The provision would also require record votes on recommendations contained both in this report and the March report on payment policies.

Section 545. Development of patient assessment instruments

The provision would require the Secretary to report to the Congress on the development of standard instruments for the assessment of the health and functional status of patients and make recommendations on the use of such standard instruments for payment purposes.

Section 546. GAO report on impact of the emergency medical treatment and Active Labor Act (EMTALA) on hospital emergency departments

GAO would be required to evaluate the impact of the Emergency Medical Treatment and Active Labor Act on hospitals, emergency physicians, and on-call physicians covering emergency departments and to submit a report to Congress by May 1, 2001.

TITLE VI—PROVISIONS RELATING TO PART C (MEDICARE+CHOICE PROGRAM) AND OTHER MEDICARE MANAGED CARE PROVISIONS

Subtitle A—Medicare+Choice Payment Reforms

Section 601. Increase in minimum payment amount

The provision would set the minimum payment amount for aged enrollees within the 50 states and the District of Columbia in a Metropolitan Statistical Area with a population of more than 250,000 at $525 in 2001. For all other areas within the 50 States and the District of Columbia, the minimum would be $475. For any area outside the 50 States and the District of Columbia, the $525 and $475 minimum amounts would also be applied, except that the 2001 minimum payment amount could not exceed 120% of the 2000 minimum payment amount.

Section 602. Increase in minimum percentage increase

This provision would apply a 3% minimum update in 2001 and return to the current law minimum update of 2% thereafter.

Section 603. 10-Year phase in of risk adjustment

Until such time that risk adjustment is based on data from inpatient hospital and ambulatory settings, 10% of payments would be based on risk-adjusted inpatient data built on the 15 principal inpatient diagnostic cost groups (PIP-DCGs) and 90% would be adjusted solely using the older demographic method. Beginning with the first year that risk adjustment is based on data from inpatient hospitals and ambulatory settings, it would be phased in over 10 years, in equal increments. (The Secretary currently plans to implement this new system in 2004.)

Section 604. Transition to revised Medicare+Choice payment rates

Within 2 weeks after the date of enactment of the Act, the Secretary must announce revised M+C capitation rates for 2001, due to changes from this Act. Plans that previously provided notice of their intention to terminate contracts or reduce their service area for 2001 would have 2 weeks after announcement of the revised rates to rescind their notice and submit ACR information. Further, any M+C organization that would receive higher capitation payments as a result of this Act must submit revised ACR information within 2 weeks after announcement of the revised rates. Plans may only reduce premiums, reduce cost sharing, enhance benefits, or utilize stabilization funds. Notwithstanding the issuance of revised rates, M+C organizations would continue to be paid on a fee-for-service basis for costs associated with new national coverage determinations that are made mid-year.

Section 605. Revision of payment rates for ESRD patients enrolled in Medicare+Choice plans

This provision would require that the Secretary increase the M+C payment rates for enrollees with ESRD. The revised rates would reflect the demonstration rate (including the risk-adjustment methodology) of social health maintenance organizations' ESRD capitation demonstrations. The revised rates would include adjustments for factors such as renal treatment modality, age, and underlying cause of the disease.

Section 606. Permitting premium reductions as additional benefits under Medicare+Choice plans

This provision would permit M+C plans to offer reduced Medicare Part B premiums to their enrollees as part of providing any required additional benefits or reduced cost-sharing. An M+C organization could elect a reduction in its M+C payment up to 125% of the annual Part B premium. However, only 80% of this amount could be used to reduce an enrollee's actual Part B premium. This would have the effect of returning up to 100% of the beneficiary's Part B premium. The reduction would apply uniformly to each enrollee of the M+C plan. Plans would include information about Part B premium reductions as part of the required information that is provided to enrollees for comparing plan options.

Section 607. Full implementation of risk adjustment for congestive heart failure enrollees for 2001

This provision would fully implement risk adjustment based on inpatient hospital diagnoses for an individual who had a qualifying congestive heart failure inpatient diagnosis between July 1, 1999 and June 30, 2000, if that individual was enrolled in a coordinated care plan offered on January 1, 2001. This would apply for only 1 year, beginning on January 1, 2001. This payment amount would be excluded from the determination of the budget neutrality factor.

Section 608. Expansion of application of Medicare+Choice new entry bonus

This provision would expand the application of the new entry bonus for M+C plans to include areas for which notification had been provided, as of October 3, 2000, that no plans would be available January 1, 2001.

Section 609. Report on inclusion of certain costs of the Department of Veterans Affairs and Military Facility Services in calculating Medicare+Choice payment rates

The Secretary shall report to Congress by January 1, 2003, on a method to phase-in the costs of military facility services furnished by the Department of Veterans Affairs or the Department of Defense to Medicare-eligible beneficiaries in the calculation of an area's M+C capitation payment. This report would include, on a county-by-county basis: the actual or estimated costs of such services to Medicare-eligible beneficiaries; the change in M+C capitation payment rates if such costs were included in the calculation of payment rates; one or more proposals for the implementation of payment adjustments to M+C plans in counties where the payment rate has been affected due to failure to account for the cost of such services; and a system to ensure that when a M+C enrollee receives covered services through a facility of these Departments, there is an appropriate payment recovery to the Medicare program.

Subtitle B—Other Medicare+Choice Reforms

Section 611. Payments of additional amounts for new benefits covered during a contract term

The provision would require payment adjustments to M+C plans if a legislative change resulted in significant increased costs, similar to the current law requirements for adjusting payments due to significant increased costs resulting from National Coverage Determination (NCDs). In addition, this provision would require that cost projections and payment adjustments be based on actuarial estimates provided by the Chief Actuary of the Health Care Financing Administration.

Section 612. Restriction on implementation of significant new regulatory requirements mid-year

The provision would preclude the Secretary from implementing, other than at the beginning of a calendar year, regulations that impose new, significant regulatory requirements on M+C organizations and plans.

Section 613. Timely approval of marketing material that follows model marketing language

The provision would require the Secretary to make decisions, within 10 days, approving or modifying marketing material used by M+C organizations, provided that the organization uses model language specified by the Secretary. This provision would apply to marketing material submitted on or after January 1, 2001.

Section 614. Avoiding duplicative regulation

This provision would further stipulate when Medicare law preempts State law or regulation from applying to M+C plans, by specifying that the term benefit requirements includes cost-sharing requirements. Second, the provision would stipulate that State laws and regulations affecting marketing materials, and summaries and schedules of benefits regarding an M+C plan, would also be preempted by Medicare law.

Section 615. election of uniform local coverage policy For Medicare+Choice plan covering multiple localities

An M+C organization offering a plan in an area with more than one local coverage policy would be able to elect to have the local coverage policy for the part of the area that is most beneficial to M+C enrollees (as identified by the Secretary) apply to all M+C enrollees enrolled in the plan.

Section 616. Eliminating health disparities in Medicare+Choice Program

This provision would expand the M+C quality assurance programs for M+C plans to include a separate focus on racial and ethnic minorities. The Secretary would also be required to report to Congress how the quality assurance programs focus on racial and ethnic minorities, within 2 years after enactment and biannually thereafter.

Section 617. Medicare+Choice Program compatibility with employer or union group health plans

In order to make the M+C program compatible with employer or union group health plans, this provision would allow the Secretary to waive or modify requirements that hinder the design of, offering of, or enrollment in certain M+C plans. Plans included in the category are M+C plans under contract between M+C organizations and employers, labor organizations, or trustees of a fund established by employers and/or labor organizations.

Section 618. Special Medigap enrollment antidiscrimination provision for certain beneficiaries

This provision would extend the period for Medigap enrollment for certain M+C enrollees affected by termination of coverage. For individuals enrolled in an M+C plan during a 12-month trial period, their trial period would begin again if they re-enrolled in another M+C plan because of an involuntary termination. During this new trial period, they would retain their rights to enroll in a Medigap policy; however, the total time for a trial period could not exceed 2 years from the time they first enrolled in an M+C plan.

Section 619. Restoring effective date of elections and changes of elections of Medicare+Choice plans

This provision would allow individuals who enroll in an M+C plan after the 10th day of the month to receive coverage beginning on the first day of the next calendar month, effective January 1, 2001.

Section 620. Permitting ESRD beneficiaries to enroll in another Medicare+Choice plan if the plan in which they are enrolled is terminated

This provision would permit ESRD beneficiaries to enroll in another M+C plan if they lost coverage when their plan terminated its contract or reduced its service area. This provision would also be retroactive, to include individuals whose enrollment in an M+C plan was terminated between December 31, 1998 and enactment of this legislation.

Section 621. Providing choice for skilled nursing facility services under the Medicare+Choice program

Effective for M+C contracts entered into or renewed on or after the date of enactment, the provision would require an M+C plan to cover post-hospitalization skilled nursing care through an enrollee's "home skilled nursing facility" if the plan has a contract with the facility or if the home facility agrees to accept substantially similar payment under the same terms and conditions that apply to similarly situated SNFs that are under contract with the plan. A "home skilled nursing facility" is defined as (a) one in which the enrollee resided at the time of the hospital admission that triggered eligibility for SNF care upon discharge, or (b) is the facility that is providing such services through the continuing care retirement community in which the enrollee resided at the time of hospital admission, or (c) is the facility in which the spouse of the enrollee is residing at the time of the enrollee's hospital discharge. The beneficiary would be required to receive coverage for SNF care at the home facility that is no less favorable than he or she would receive otherwise in another SNF that has a contract with the plan.

Home skilled nursing facilities are permitted to refuse to accept Medicare+Choice enrollees or to impose conditions on their acceptance of such an enrollee.

The provision would require the Medicare Payment Advisory Commission (MedPAC) to analyze and, within 2 years of enactment, report to Congress on the effects of this provision on the scope of benefits, administrative and other costs incurred by M+C organizations, and the contractual relationships between those plans and SNFs.

Section 622. Providing for accountability of Medicare+Choice plans

The provision would mandate review of ACR submissions by the HCFA Chief Actuary with respect to submissions for ACRs filed for 2001 and thereafter.

Subtitle C—Other Managed Care Reforms

Section 631. 1-Year extension of Social Health Maintenance Organization (SHMO) demonstration poject

The provision would extend SHMO waivers until 30 months after the Secretary submits a report with a plan for integration and transition of SHMOs into an option under the M+C program. This 30-month extension would supersede the 18-month extension in BBRA 99.

Section 632. Revised terms and conditions for extension of Medicare Community Nursing Organization (CNO) Demonstration Project

Effective as if enacted with BBRA99, the provision would eliminate the requirement that CNO capitated payments be reduced to ensure budget neutrality. Through December 2001, the projects would operate under the same terms and conditions applicable during 1999, but with modification to the capitation rates. From October 1, 2000, through December 31, 2000, the capitation rates would be adjusted for inflation since 1999 and for changes in service packages, but reduced by 10 percent for in projects in Arizona, Minnesota, and Illinois and by 15 percent in New York. In 2001, the rates would be determined by actuarially adjusting the rates in the prior period for inflation, utilization, and changes to the service package. Adjustments would be made to case management fees for certain frail enrollees, and requirements would be imposed to create greater uniformity in clinical features among participating sites and to improve quality and enrollee satisfaction.

By July 1, 2001, the Secretary would be required to submit to the House Committees on Ways and Means and Commerce and the Senate Committee on Finance a report evaluating the projects for the period July 1997 through December 1999 and for the extension period after September 30, 2000. A final report would be required by July 1. 2002. The provision would require certain methods to be used to compare spending per beneficiary under the projects.

Section 633. Extension of Medicare municipal health services demonstration projects

The provision would extend the Medicare municipal health services demonstration projects for 2 additional years, through December 31; 2004.

Section 634. Service area expansion for medicare cost contracts during transition period

This provision would allow service area expansion for Medicare cost contracts, if the request was submitted to the Secretary before September 1, 2003.

TITLE VII—MEDICAID

Section 701. DSH payments

(a) Modifications to DSH allotments

For FY2001, the provision would set each state's DSH allotment equal to its allotment for FY2000 increased by the percentage change in the consumer price index for that year, subject to a ceiling that would be equal to 12% of that state's total medical assistance payments in that year.

For FY2002, the provision would set each state's DSH allotment equal to its allotment for 2001 as determined above, increased by the percentage change in the consumer price index for FY2001, subject to a ceiling equal to 12% of that state's total medical assistance payments in that year.

For extremely low DSH states, states whose FY1999 federal and state DSH expenditures (as reported to HCFA on August 31, 2000) are greater than zero but less than one percent of the state's total medical assistance expenditures during that fiscal year, the DSH allotments for FY2001 would be equal to 1 percent of the state's total amount of expenditures under their plan for such assistance during that fiscal year. For subsequent fiscal years, the allotments for extremely low DSH states would be equal to their allotment for the previous year, increased by the percentage change in the consumer price index for the previous year, subject to a ceiling of 12% of that state's total medical assistance payments in that year.

Effective on the date that the final regulation for Medicaid upper payment limits is published in the Federal Register.

(b) Assuring identification of Medicaid managed care patients

Effective for Medicaid managed care contracts in effect on January 1, 2001, the provision would clarify that Medicaid enrollees of managed care organizations and primary care case management organizations are to be included for the purposes of calculating the Medicaid inpatient utilization rate and the low-income utilization rate. Also effective January 1, 2001, states must include in their MCO contracts information that allows the state to determine which hospital services are provided to Medicaid beneficiaries through managed care, and would also require states to include a sponsorship code for the managed care entity on the Medicaid beneficiary's identification card.

(c) Application of Medicaid DSH transition rule to public hospitals in all states

The provision would revise BBA97, as modified by BBRA 99, so that the 175% hospital-specific limit, formerly applied only to certain public hospitals in California, applies to qualifying public hospitals in all states. The higher limit would apply for two state fiscal years beginning on the first day of the state fiscal year that begins after September 30, 2002 and ends on the last day of the succeeding state fiscal year. Hospitals that would qualify for the higher hospital-specific limit would be those owned or operated by a state and meet the minimum federal requirements for disproportionate share hospitals. The permanent ceiling for California would not be affected.

For states operating under waivers approved under section 1115 of the Social Security Act, increased payments for public hospitals under this provision would be included in the baseline expenditure limit for the purposes of determining budget neutrality.

(d) Assistance for certain public hospitals

The provision would provide additional funds for certain public hospitals that are: owned or operated by a state (or by an instrumentality or unit of government within a state); are not receiving DSH payments as of October 1, 2000: and have a low-income utilization rate in excess of 65% as of the same date. Funds are provided in addition to the DSH allotment for any state with eligible hospitals and the total for all states cannot exceed the following amounts: $15 million for FY 2002; $176 million for 2003; $269 million for 2004; $330 million for 2005; and for FY 2006 and each fiscal year thereafter; $375 million.

(e) DSH payment accountability standards

The provision would require the Secretary to implement accountability standards to ensure that DSH payments are used to reimburse States and hospitals that are eligible for such payments and are otherwise in accordance with Medicaid statutory requirements.

Section 702. New prospective payment system for federally-qualified health centers and rural health clinics

The provision would create a new Medicaid prospective payment system for federally qualified health centers (FQHCs) and rural health centers (RHCs) beginning in FY2001. In FY2001 existing FQHCs and RHCs would be paid per visit payments equal to 100% of the average costs incurred during 1999 and 2000 adjusted to take into account any increase or decrease in the scope of services furnished. For entities first qualifying as FQHCs or RHCs after 2000, the per visit payments would begin in the first year that the center or clinic attains qualification and would be based on 100% of the costs incurred during that year based on the rates established for similar centers or clinics with similar caseloads in the same adjacent geographic area. In the absence of such similar centers or clinics, the methodology would be based on that used for developing rates for established FQHCs or RHCs or a methodology or reasonable specifications as established by the Secretary. For each fiscal year thereafter, per visit payments for all FQHCs and RHCs would be equal to amounts for the preceding fiscal year increased by the percentage increase in the Medicare Economic Index applicable to primary care services for that fiscal year, and adjusted for any increase or decrease in the scope of services furnished during that fiscal year. In managed care contracts, States must make supplemental payments to the center or clinic that would be equal to the difference between contracted amounts and the cost-based amounts. Those payments would be paid on a schedule mutually agreed to by the State and the FQHC or RHC. Alternative payment methods would be permitted only when payments are at least equal to amounts otherwise provided.

The provision would also direct the Comptroller General to provide for a study on how to rebase or refine cost payment methods for the services of FQHCs and RHCs. The report would be due to Congress no later than 4 years after the date of enactment.

Section 703. Streamlined approval of continued state-wide 1115 Medicaid waivers

The provision would define the process for submitting requests for and receiving extensions of Medicaid demonstration waivers authorized under Section 1115 of the Social Security Act which have already received initial 3-year extensions. It would require each state requesting such an extension to submit an application at least 120 days prior to the expiration date of the existing waiver. No later than 45 days after the Secretary receives such application, the Secretary would be required to notify the State if she intends to review the existing terms and conditions of the project and would inform the State of proposed changes in the terms and conditions of the waiver. If the Secretary fails to provide such notification, the request would be deemed approved. During the 30-day period beginning after the Secretary provides the proposed terms and conditions to the state, those terms and conditions would be negotiated. No later than 120 days after the date that the request for extension was submitted (or such later date as agreed to by the chief executive officer of the State) the Secretary would be required to approve the application subject to the agreed upon terms and conditions or, in the absence of an agreement, such terms and conditions that are determined by the Secretary to be reasonably consistent with the overall objective of the waiver, or disapprove the application. If the waiver is not approved or disapproved during this period, the request would be deemed approved in the terms and conditions as have been agreed to (if any) by the Secretary and the State. Approvals would be for periods not to exceed 3 years and would be subject to the final reporting and evaluation requirements in current law.

Section 704. Medicaid county-organized health systems

The provision would allow the current exemption for certain Health Insuring Organizations (HIOs) from certain Medicaid HMO contracting requirements to apply as long as no more than 14% of all Medicaid beneficiaries in the state are enrolled in those HIOs. This provision would be effective as if included in the enactment of the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985.

Sec. 705. Deadline for issuance of final regulation relating to Medicaid upper payment limits

The provision would require the Secretary to issue final regulations governing upper payment limits no later than December 31, 2000. It also requires that the final regulation establish a separate UPL for non-state-owned or operated government facilities based on the proposed rule described above.

The provision also requires the final regulation to stipulate a third set of rules governing the transition period for certain states. This additional set of rules would apply to states with payment arrangements approved or in effect on or before October 1, 1992, or under which claims for federal matching were paid on or before that date, and for which such payments exceed the UPLs established under the final regulation. For these states, a 6-year transition period would apply, beginning with the period that begins on the first state fiscal year that starts after September 30, 2002 and ends on September 30, 2008. For each year during the transition period, applicable states must reduce excess payments by 15%. Full compliance with final regulations is required by October 1, 2008.

Section 706. Alaska FMAP

The provision would change the formula for calculating the state percentage and thus the federal matching percentage for Alaska for fiscal years 2001 through 2005. The state percentage for Alaska would be calculated by using an adjusted per capita income instead of the per capita income generally used. The adjusted per capita income for Alaska would be calculated as the three year average per capita income for the state divided by 1.05.

TITLE VIII—STATE CHILDREN'S HEALTH INSURANCE PROGRAM

Section 801. Special rule for redistribution and availability of unused fiscal year 1998 and 1999 SCHIP allotments

The provision would establish a new method for distributing unspent FY1998 and FY1999 allotments. States that use all their SCHIP allotments (for each of those years) would receive an amount equal to estimated spending in excess of their original exhausted allotment. Each territory that spends its original allotment would receive an amount that bears the same ratio to 1.05% of the total amount available for redistribution as the ratio of its original allotment to the total allotment for all territories.

States that do not use all their SCHIP allotment would receive an amount equal to the total amount of unspent funds, less amounts distributed to states that fully exhausted their original allotments, multiplied by the ratio of a state's unspent original allotment to the total amount of unspent funds. States may use up to 10% of the retained FY1998 funds for outreach activities.

To calculate the amounts available for redistribution in each formula described above, the Secretary would use amounts reported by states not later than November 30 of the relevant fiscal year on HCFA Form 64 or HCFA Form 21, as approved by the Secretary. Redistributed funds would be available through the end of FY2002.

Section 802. Authority to pay Medicaid expansion SCHIP costs from title XXI appropriation

This provision provides a technical accounting clarification requested by the Health Care Financing Administration. It would authorize the payment of the costs of SCHIP Medicaid expansions and costs of benefits provided during periods of presumptive eligibility from the SCHIP appropriation rather than from the Medicaid appropriation, with a subsequent offset. In addition, the provision would codify proposed rules regarding the order of payments for benefits and administrative costs from state-specific SCHIP allotments.

TITLE IX—OTHER PROVISIONS

Subtitle A—PACE Program

Section 901. Extension of transition for current waivers

The provision would permit the Secretary to continue to operate the Program of All-Inclusive Care for the Elderly (PACE) under waivers for a period of 36 months (rather than 24 months), and States may do so for 4 years (rather than 3 years). OBRA 86 required the Secretary to grant waivers of certain Medicare and Medicaid requirements to not more than 10 public or non-profit private community-based organizations to provide health and long-term care services on a capitated basis to frail elderly persons at risk of institutionalization. BBA 97 established PACE as a permanent provider under Medicare and as a special benefit under Medicaid.

Section 902. Continuing of certain operating arrangements permitted

If prior to becoming a permanent component of Medicare, a PACE demonstration project had contractual or other operating arrangements that are not recognized under permanent program regulations, the provision would require the Secretary, in consultation with the state agency, to permit it to continue under such arrangements as long as it is consistent with the objectives of the PACE program.

Section 903. Flexibility in exercising waiver authority

The provision would enable the Secretary to exercise authority to modify or waive Medicare or Medicaid requirements to respond to the needs of PACE programs related to employment and the use of community care physicians. The Secretary must approve requests for such waivers within 90 days of the date the request for waiver is received.

Subtitle B—Outreach to Eligible Low-Income Medicare Beneficiaries

Section 911. Outreach on availability of medicare cost-sharing assistance to eligible low-income Medicare beneficiaries

The provision would require the Commissioner of the Social Security Administration to conduct outreach efforts to identify individuals who may be eligible for Medicaid payment of Medicare cost sharing and to notify these persons of the availability of such assistance. The Commissioner would also be required to furnish, at least annually, a list of such individuals who reside in each state to that state's agency responsible for administering the Medicaid program as well as to any other appropriate state agency. The list should include the name and address, and whether such individuals have experienced reductions in Social Security benefits. The provision would also require the General Accounting Office to conduct a study of the impact of the outreach activities of the Commissioner to submit to Congress no later than 18 months after such outreach begins. The provision would be effective one year after date of enactment.

Subtitle C—Maternal and Child Health Block Grant

Section 921. Increase in authorization of appropriations for the maternal and child health services block grant

The provision would increase the authorization of appropriations for the Maternal and Child Health Services Block Grant under Title V from $705,000,000 to $850,000,000 for fiscal year 2001 and each fiscal year thereafter.

Subtitle D—Diabetes

Section 931. Increase in appropriations for special diabetes programs for type I diabetes and Indians

The provision would extend for 1 year, to FY2003, the authority for grants to be made for both the Special Diabetes Program for Type I Diabetes and for the Special Diabetes Programs for Indians under the Public Health Service Act. The provision would also expand funding available for these programs. For each grant program, the provision would increase total funding to $100 million each for FY2001, FY2002 and FY2003. For FY2001 and FY2002, $30 million of the $100 million for each program would be transferred from SCHIP as set forth in the Balanced Budget Act of 1997; the remaining $70 million would be drawn from the Treasury out of funds not otherwise appropriated. In FY2003, the entire $100 million would be drawn from the Treasury out of funds not otherwise appropriated. In addition, the provision would extend the due date on final evaluation reports for these two grant programs from January 1, 2002 to January 1, 2003.

Section 932. Appropriations for Ricky Ray Hemophilia Relief Fund

This provision provides for a direct appropriation of $475 million for FY 2001. Funds would be available until expended.

The conference agreement would enact the provisions of H.R. 5544, as introduced on October 25, 2000. The text of that bill follow:

(i)(1) For purposes of this Act and any regulations to implement this Act, alleviating pain or discomfort in the usual course of professional practice is a legitimate medical purpose for the dispensing, distributing, or administering of a controlled substance that is consistent with public health and safety, even if the use of such a substance may increase the risk of death. Nothing in this section authorizes intentionally dispensing, distributing, or administering a controlled substance for the purpose of causing death or assisting another person in causing death.

(2)(A) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, in determining whether a registration is consistent with the public interest under this Act, the Attorney General shall give no force and effect to State law authorizing or permitting assisted suicide or euthanasia.

(B) Paragraph (2) applies only to conduct occurring after the date of enactment of this subsection.

(3) Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to alter the roles of the Federal and State governments in regulating the practice of medicine. Regardless of whether the Attorney General determines pursuant to this section that the registration of a practitioner is inconsistent with the public interest, it remains solely within the discretion of State authorities to determine whether action should be taken with respect to the State professional license of the practitioner or State prescribing privileges.

(4) Nothing in the Pain Relief Promotion Act of 2000 (including the amendments made by such Act) shall be construed—

(A) to modify the Federal requirements that a controlled substance be dispensed only for a legitimate medical purpose pursuant to paragraph (1); or

In meeting such burden, it shall not be sufficient to prove that the applicant or registrant knew that the use of controlled substance may increase the risk of death.

SEC. 202. EDUCATION AND TRAINING PROGRAMS.

(2) the SBIR program made the cost-effective and unique research and development capabilities possessed by the small businesses of the Nation available to Federal agencies and departments;

(3) the innovative goods and services developed by small businesses that participated in the SBIR program have produced innovations of critical importance in a wide variety of high-technology fields, including biology, medicine, education, and defense;

(4) the SBIR program is a catalyst in the promotion of research and development, the commercialization of innovative technology, the development of new products and services, and the continued excellence of this Nation's high-technology industries; and

"(ii) if the company has private capital of more than $15,000,000 but not more than $30,000,000, the total amount of leverage shall not exceed $45,000,000 plus 200 percent of the amount of private capital over $15,000,000; and

"(iii) if the company has private capital of more than $30,000,000, the total amount of leverage shall not exceed $75,000,000 plus 100 percent of the amount of private capital over $30,000,000 but not to exceed an additional $15,000,000.

"(B) Adjustments.—

"(i) In general.—The dollar amounts in clauses (i), (ii), and (iii) of subparagraph (A) shall be adjusted annually to reflect increases in the Consumer Price Index established by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor.

(ii) Initial adjustments.—The initial adjustments made under this subparagraph after the date of the enactment of the Small Business Reauthorization Act of 1997 shall reflect only increases from March 31, 1993.

"(C) Investments in low-income geographic areas.—In calculating the outstanding leverage of a company for the purposes of subparagraph (A), the Administrator shall not include the amount of the cost basis of any equity investment made by the company in a smaller enterprise located in a low-income geographic area (as defined in section 351), to the extent that the total of such amounts does not exceed 50 percent of the company's private capital.".

(2) Maximum aggregate leverage.—Section 303(b)(4) of the Small Business Investment Act of 1958 (15 U.S.C. 683(b)(4)) is amended by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(D) Investments in low-income geographic areas.—In calculating the aggregate outstanding leverage of a company for the purposes of subparagraph (A), the Administrator shall not include the amount of the cost basis of any equity investment made by the company in a smaller enterprise located in a low-income geographic area (as defined in section 351), to the extent that the total of such amounts does not exceed 50 percent of the company's private capital.".

(e) Bankruptcy Exemption for New Markets Venture Capital Companies.—Section 109(b)(2) of title 11, United States Code, is amended by inserting "a New Markets Venture Capital company as defined in section 351 of the Small Business Investment Act of 1958," after "homestead association,".

(f) Federal Savings Associations.—Section 5(c)(4) of the Home Owners' Loan Act (12 U.S.C. 1464(c)(4)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(F) New markets venture capital companies.—A Federal savings association may invest in stock, obligations, or other securities of any New Markets Venture Capital company as defined in section 351 of the Small Business investment Act of 1958, except that a Federal savings association may not make any investment under this subparagraph if its aggregate outstanding investment under this subparagraph would exceed 5 percent of the capital and surplus of such savings association.".

SEC. 902. BUSINESSLINC GRANTS AND COOPERATIVE AGREEMENTS.

Section 8 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(n) BusinessLINC Grants and Cooperative Agreements.—

"(2) Matching requirement.—Subject to subparagraph (B), the Administrator may make a grant to a coalition under paragraph (1) only if the coalition provides for activities described in paragraph (1)(A) or (1)(B) an amount, either in kind or in cash, equal to the grant amount.

"(3) Authorization of appropriations.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this subsection $6,600,000, to remain available until expended, for each of fiscal years 2001 through 2006.".

Following is explanatory language for H.R. 5545, as introduced on October 25, 2000. References in the following to the "conference agreement" refer to the text of that bill.

JOINT STATEMENT OF MANAGERS OF H.R. 2614—SMALL BUSINESS REAUTHORIZATION

Title I—Small Business Innovation Research Program

The Small Business Innovation Research Program Reauthorization Act of 2000 (H.R. 2392) was introduced on June 30, 1999, and referred to the House Committees on Small Business and Science. Both Committees held hearings and the House Committee on Small Business reported H.R. 2392 on September 23, 1999 (H. Rept. 106–329). In the interest of moving the bill to the floor of the House of Representatives promptly, the Committee on Science agreed not to exercise its right to report the legislation, provided that the House Committee on Small Business agreed to add the selected portions of the Science Committee version of the legislation, as Sections 8 through 11 of the House floor text of H.R. 2392. H.R. 2392 passed the House without further amendment on September 27. The Science Committee provisions were explained in floor statements by Congressmen Sensenbrenner, Morella, and Mark Udall.

On March 21, 2000, the Senate Committee marked-up H.R. 2392 and on May 10, 2000, reported the bill (S. Rept. 106–289). The Senate Committee struck several of the sections originating from the House Committee on Science and added sections not in the House-passed legislation, including a requirement that Federal agencies with Small Business Innovation Research (SBIR) programs report their methodology for calculating their SBIR budgets to the Small Business Administration (SBA) and a program to assist states in the development of small high-technology businesses. Negotiations then began among the leadership of the Senate and House Committees on Small Business and the House Committee on Science (hereinafter referred to as the three committees). The resultant compromise text contains all major House and Senate provisions, some of which have been amended to reflect a compromise position. A section-by-section explanation of the revised text follows. For purposes of this statement, the bill passed by the House of Representatives is referred to as the "House version" and the bill reported by the Senate Committee on Small Business is referred to as the "Senate version."

Section 101. Short title; table of contents

The compromise text uses the Senate short title: "Small Business Innovation Research Program Reauthorization Act of 2000." The table of contents lists the sections in the compromise text.

Section 102. Findings

The House and Senate versions of the findings are very similar. The compromise text uses the House version of the findings.

Section 103. Extension of the SBIR program

The House version extends the SBIR program for seven years through September 30, 2007. The Senate version extends the program for ten years through September 30, 2010. The compromise text extends the program for eight years through September 30, 2008.

Section 104. Annual report

The House version provides for the annual report on the SBIR program prepared by the SBA to be sent to the Committee on Science, as well as to the House and Senate Committees on Small Business that currently receive it. The Senate version did not include this section. The compromise text adopts the House language.

Section 105. Third phase assistance

The compromise text of this technical amendment is identical to both the House and Senate versions.

Section 106. Report on programs for annual performance plan

This section requires each agency that participates in the SBIR program to submit to Congress a performance plan consistent with the Government Performance and Results Act. The House and Senate versions have the same intent. The compromise text uses the House version.

Section 107. Output and outcome data

Both the House and Senate versions contain sections enabling the collection and maintenance of information from awardees as is necessary to assess the SBIR program. Both the Senate and House versions require the SBA to maintain a public database at SBA containing information on awardees from all SBIR agencies. The Senate version adds paragraphs to the public database section dealing with database identification of businesses or subsidiaries established for the commercial application of SBIR products or services and the inclusion of information regarding mentors and mentoring networks. The House version further requires the SBA to establish and maintain a government database, which is exempt from the Freedom of Information Act and is to be used solely for program evaluation. Outside individuals must sign a non-disclosure agreement before gaining access to the database. The compromise text contains each of these provisions, with certain modifications and clarifications, which are addressed below.

With respect to the public database, the compromise text makes clear that proprietary information, so identified by a small business concern, will not be included in the public database. With respect to the government database, the compromise text clarifies that the inclusion of information in the government database is not to be considered publication for purposes of patent law. The compromise text further permits the SBA to include in the government database any information received in connection with an SBIR award the SBA Administrator, in conjunction with the SBIR agency program managers, consider to be relevant and appropriate or that the Federal agency considers to be useful to SBIR program evaluation.

With respect to small business reporting for the government database, the compromise text directs that when a small business applies for a second phase award it is required to update information in the government database. If an applicant for a second phase award receives the award, it shall update information in the database concerning the award at the termination of the award period and will be requested to voluntarily update the information annually for an additional period of five years. This reporting procedure is similar to current Department of Defense requirements for the reporting of such information. When sales or additional investment information is related to more than one second phase award is involved, the compromise text permits a small business to apportion the information among the awards in any way it chooses, provided the apportionment is noted on all awards so apportioned.

The three committees understand that receiving complete commercialization data on the SBIR program is difficult, regardless of any reasonable time frame that could be established for the reporting of such data. Commercialization may occur many years following the receipt of a research grant and research from an award, while not directly resulting in a marketable product, may set the groundwork for additional research that leads to such a product. Nevertheless, the three committees believe that the government database will provide useful information for program evaluation.

Section 108. National Research Council Reports.

The House version requires the four largest SBIR program agencies to enter into an agreement with the National Research Council (NRC) to conduct a comprehensive study of how the SBIR program has stimulated technological innovation and used small businesses to meet Federal research and development needs and to make recommendations on potential improvements to the program. The Senate version contains no similar provision. The study was designed to answer questions remaining from the House Committees' reviews of these programs and to make sure that a current evaluation of the program is available when the program next comes up for reauthorization.

The compromise text makes several changes to the House text. The compromise text adds the National Science Foundation to the agencies entering the agreement with the NRC and requires the agencies to consult with the SBA in entering such agreement. It also expands on the House version, which requires a review of the quality of SBIR research, to require a comparison of the value of projects conducted under SBIR with those funded by other Federal research and development expenditures. The compromise text further broadens the House version's review of the economic rate of return of the SBIR program to require an evaluation of the economic benefits of the SBIR program, including economic rate of return, and a comparison of the economic benefits of the SBIR program with that of other Federal research and development expenditures. The compromise text allows the NRC to choose an appropriate time-frame for such analysis that results in a fair comparison.

The three committees believe that a comprehensive report on the SBIR program and its relation to other Federal research expenditures will be useful in program oversight and will provide Congress with an understanding of the effects of extramural Federal research and development funding provided to large and small businesses and universities. The three committees understand, however, that measuring the direct benefits to the nation's economy from the SBIR program and other Federal research expenditures may be difficult to calculate and may not provide a complete portrayal of the benefits achieved by the SBIR program. Accordingly, the legislation requires the NRC also to review the non-economic benefits of the SBIR program, which may include, among other matters, the increase in scientific knowledge that has resulted from the program. The paragraph in the compromise text calling for recommendations remains the same as the House version, except that the bill now asks the NRC to make recommendations, should there be any.

While the study is to be carried out within National Research Council study guidelines and procedures, the compromise text requires the NRC to take the steps necessary to ensure that individuals from the small business community with expertise in the SBIR program are well-represented in the panel established for performing the study and among the peer reviewers of the study. The NRC is to consult with and consider the views of the SBA's Office of Technology and the SBA's Office of Advocacy and to conduct the study in an open manner that makes sure that the views and experiences of small businesses involved in the program are carefully considered in the design and execution of the study. Extension of the SBIR program for eight years rather than the five being contemplated when the House study provision was initially written has necessitated some adjustments in the study. The report is now required three years rather than four years after the date of enactment of the Act and the NRC is to update the report within six years of enactment. The update is intended to bring current, any information from the study relevant to the reauthorization of the SBIR program. It is not intended to be a second full-fledged study. In addition, semiannual progress reports by NRC to the three committees are required.

Section 109. Federal agency expenditures for the SBIR program

The Senate version requires each Federal agency with an SBIR program to provide the SBA with a report describing its methodology for calculating its extramural budget for purposes of SBIR program set-aside and requires the Administrator of the SBA to include an analysis of the methodology from each agency in its annual report to the Congress. The House version has no similar provision. The compromise text follows the Senate text except that it specifies that each agency, rather than the agency's comptroller, shall submit the agency's report to the Administrator. The three committees intend that each agency's methodology include an itemization of each research program that is excluded from the calculation of its extramural budget for SBIR purposes as well as a brief explanation of why the agency feels each excluded program meets a particular exemption.

Section 110. Policy directive modifications

The House version includes policy directive modifications in Section 9 and the requirement of a second phase commercial plan in Section 10. The Senate version includes policy directive modifications in Section 6. The Senate version and now the compromise text require the Administrator to make modifications to SBA's policy directives 120 days after the date of enactment rather than the 30 days contained in the House version. The compromise text drops the House policy directive dealing with awards exceeding statutory dollar amounts and time limits because this flexibility is already being provided administratively. Addressed below is a description of the policy directive modifications contained in the compromise text that were not included in both the Senate version and the House version.

Section 10 of the House version requires the SBA to modify its policy directives to require that small businesses provide a commercial plan with each application for a second-phase award. The Senate version does not contain a similar provision. The compromise text requires the SBA to modify its policy directives to require that small businesses provide a "succinct commercialization plan for each second phase award moving towards commercialization." The three committees acknowledge that commercialization is a current element of the SBIR program. The statutory definition of SBIR, which is not amended by H.R. 2392, includes "a second phase, to further develop proposals which meet particular program needs, in which awards shall be made based on the scientific and technical merit and feasibility of the proposals, as evidenced by the first phase, considering among other things the proposal's commercial potential . . .", and lists evidence of commercial potential as the small business's commercialization record, private sector funding commitments, SBIR Phase III commitments, and the presence of other indicators of the commercial potential. The three committees do not intend that the addition of a commercialization plan either increase or decrease the emphasis an agency places on the commercialization when reviewing second-phase proposals. Rather, the commercialization plan will give SBIR agencies a means of determining the seriousness with which individual applicants approach commercialization.

The commercialization plan, while concise, should show that the business has thought through both the steps it must take to prepare for the fruits of the SBIR award to enter the commercial marketplace or government procurement and the steps to build business expertise as needed during the SBIR second phase time period. The three committees intend that agencies take into consideration the stage of development of the product or process in deciding whether an appropriate commercialization plan has been submitted. In those instances when at the time of the SBIR Phase II proposal, the grantee cannot identify either a product or process with the potential eventually to enter either the commercial or the government marketplace, no commercialization plan is required.

The compromise text also adds new provisions that were not contained in either the Senate version or the House version. Current law (Section 9(j)(3)(C) of the Small Business Act) requires that the Administrator put in place procedures to ensure, to the extent practicable, that an agency which intends to pursue research, development or production of a technology developed by a small business concern under an SBIR program enter into follow-on, non-SBIR funding agreements with the small business concern for such research, development, or production.

The three committees are concerned that agencies sometimes provide these follow-on activities to large companies who are in incumbent positions or through contract bundling without written justification or without the statutorily required documentation of the impracticability of using the small business for the work. So that the SBA and the Congress can track the extent of this problem, the compromise text requires agencies to record and report each such occurrence and to describe in writing why it is impractical to provide the research project to the original SBIR company. Additionally, the compromise text directs the SBA to develop policy directives to implement the new subsection (v), Simplified Reporting Requirements. This subsection requires that the directives regarding collection of data be designed to minimize the burden on small businesses; to permit the updating the database by electronic means; and to use standardized procedures for the collection and reporting of data.

Section 103(a)(2) of P.L. 102-564, which reauthorized the SBIR program in 1992, added language to the description of a third phase award which made it clear that the third phase is intended to be a logical conclusion of research projects selected through competitive procedures in phases one and two. The Report of the House Committee on Small Business (H.Rpt. 102-554, Pt. I) provides that the purpose of that clarification was to indicate the Committee's intent that an agency which wishes to fund an SBIR project in phase three (with non-SBIR monies) or enter into a follow-on procurement contract with an SBIR company, need not conduct another competition in order to satisfy the Federal Competition in Contracting Act (CICA). Rather, by phase three the project has survived two competitions and thus has already satisfied the requirements of CICA, set forth in section 2302(2)(E) of that Act, as they apply to the SBIR program. As there has been confusion among SBIR agencies regarding the intent of this change, the three committees reemphasize the intent initially set forth in H.Rpt. 102-554, Pt. 1, including the clarification that follow-on phase III procurement contracts with an SBIR company may include procurement of products, services, research, or any combination intended for use by the Federal government.

Section 111. Federal and State Technology Partnership Program

This section establishes the FAST program from the Senate version, which is a competitive matching grant program to encourage states to assist in the development of high-technology businesses. The House version does not contain a similar provision. The most significant changes from the Senate version in the compromise text are an extension of the maximum duration of awards from three years to five and the lowering of the matching requirement for funds assisting businesses in low income areas to 50 cents per federal dollar, as advocated by Ranking Member Velazquez of the House Small Business Committee. The compromise text combines the definitions found in the Senate version of this section and the mentoring networks section.

Section 112. Mentoring networks

The Senate version sets forth criteria for mentoring networks that organizations are encouraged to establish with matching funds from the FAST program and creates a database of small businesses willing to act as mentors. The compromise text, except for relocating the program definitions to Section 111, is the same as the Senate text. The House version did not contain a similar provision.

Section 113. Simplified reporting requirements

This section is not in either the House or the Senate versions. It requires the SBA Administrator to work with SBIR program agencies on standardizing SBIR reporting requirements with the ultimate goal of making the SBA's SBIR database more user friendly. This provision requires the SBA to consider the needs of each agency when establishing and maintaining the database. Additionally, it requires the SBA to take measures to reduce the administrative burden on SBIR program participants whenever possible including, for example, permitting updating by electronic means.

Section 114. Rural Outreach Program extension

This provision, which was not in either the House or the Senate versions, extends the life and authorization for appropriations for the Rural Outreach Program of the Small Business Administration for four additional years through fiscal year 2005. It is the intent of the three committees that this program be evaluated on the same schedule and in the same manner as the FAST program. Among other things, the evaluation should examine the extent to which the programs complement or duplicate each other. The evaluation should also include recommendations for improvements to the program, if any.

TITLE II—BUSINESS LOAN PROGRAMS

SECTION 7(A) PROGRAM

The Conferees have been concerned that the availability of smaller 7(a) guaranteed business loans has not been keeping pace with the demands of the small business community. In 1994, SBA initiated the LowDoc pilot loan program to make loans of $100,000 and less more readily available. In 1995, the Congress established a guarantee level of 80% for LowDoc loans. As requested in the Administration's 2001 Budget, during consideration of H.R. 2615 in the House of Representatives, the 80% guarantee was extended up to loans of $150,000. The Senate and the House both acted to increase the size of the LowDoc loans. In addition, both Houses agreed to increase the guaranteed percentage from 80% to 85% in anticipation that small business lenders will be more willing to focus on the smaller sized loans.

In 1988, the Congress acted to establish the maximum 7(a) loan guarantee amount at $750,000. In order to keep up with inflation, the Committee bill increases the maximum guaranteed amount to $1 million. Although a strict inflationary increase in the maximum guaranteed amount would be closer to $1.25 million, the Conferees believe it is prudent to limit the increase to $1 million, which will leave sufficient resources in the program for smaller loans.

The Conference Report also establishes a ceiling on the maximum loan size of $2 million. It has been reported to the Committee that the 7(a) guarantee has been used in conjunction with large loans in excess of $2 million. Under the Federal Credit Reform Act of 1991, appropriated subsidy dollars are used based on the gross amount of the loan. In these cases, the SBA loan guarantee is a relatively small portion of the loan, and the Conferees have questioned whether these loans meet the "credit elsewhere" standard for 7(a) loans and whether this is a good use of appropriated subsidy dollars. Therefore, the Committee agrees with the House of Representatives and has approved a ceiling of $2 million for the gross amount of a 7(a) loan.

In an effort to reduce the size of the credit subsidy rate, in 1997 Congress adopted a provision to reduce SBA's liability for accrued interest on 7(a) loans that are in default. Section 501 deletes this provision since the intended savings from this provision have failed to materialize.

For the past three years, the House and Senate Committees on Small Business have received reports about the increased number of early prepayments of large, long term SBA-guaranteed 7(a) loans. Previously, as the result of an increase in prepayments, the credit subsidy rate was adjusted upwards for Fiscal Year 1998. Subsequently, the number of prepayments continued to climb. In some cases, it has been reported that some small businesses were using the 7(a) program for short term bridge financing, when the program is designed to help small businesses obtain long term credit at a reasonable interest rate. The effect of early prepayments is to reduce the availability of long term 7(a) loans to small businesses that cannot obtain credit elsewhere.

The prepayment penalty approved by the Conferees would assess a fee to the borrower for early prepayment of any 7(a) loan with a term of 15 years or more. A penalty or fee will be assessed against any prepayment in excess of 25% of the outstanding amount of the loan during any of the first three years after disbursement. Five percent will be assessed in the first year, three percent in the second year, and one percent in the third year. If a prepayment in excess of 25% is made, the penalty will be assessed against the entire outstanding balance of the loan.

In 1995, Congress increased the guarantee fees charged to 7(a) borrowers in order to reduce the credit subsidy rate for the 7(a) program. The Senate agrees with provision, suggested by SBA and adopted by the House of Representatives, which simplifies the guarantee fee schedule. For loans totaling $150,000 or less, the guarantee fee would be two percent of the guarantee amount; for loans greater than $150,000 but less than $700,000, the fee would be three percent; and for loans of $700,000 or more, the guarantee fee would be three and ½ percent. In addition, the Conferees approved a new provision designed to be an incentive for lenders to focus more on smaller loans. This provision allows a lender to retain 25% of the guarantee fee for loans of $150,000 or less.

In 1997, Congress approved a new provision for the 504 Certified Development Company program which allows borrowers to lease out 20% of the property being financed so long as the remaining 80% is occupied by the borrower. The Conferees have approved a similar provision for 7(a) borrowers. This new provision permits the property to be financed with a 7(a) loan 20 percent or less of the business space will be rented to tenants with the borrower occupying 60% of the remaining space.

MICROLOAN PROGRAM

This section makes programmatic and technical changes to the Small Business Administration's microloan program to make it more flexible to meet credit needs, more accessible to micro entrepreneurs across the nation, and more streamlined for lenders to make loans and provide management assistance. The Senate Committee on Small Business worked closely with industry and the SBA to develop these changes.

Congress created the microloan program as a pilot in 1991 (Public Law 102-140) to reach very small businesses that were not being served by traditional lenders or SBA's credit programs. Often minorities, women, and low-income individuals, these microentrepreneurs needed very little money to launch a business, but they could not get loans because they were considered unreliable or risky borrowers by traditional credit markets. Their often weak or non-existent credit histories or limited business experience caused traditional commercial lenders to shy away from making such loans. To fill this credit need, the Microloan program was designed to provide loans to non-profit intermediary lenders, who in turn provide fixed-rate loans of not more than $25,000, and on average, loans less than $10,000, to very small businesses. In addition, lending intermediaries receive an annual grant from the SBA to provide on-going technical assistance to small businesses. The technical assistance is fundamental to this program because it teaches microentrepreneurs how to manage a successful business, and running a successful business is key to loan repayment.

As industry experts and micro borrowers have testified numerous times regarding the link between financing and technical assistance, it is critical to the success of micro enterprise, in general, and the SBA microloan program, in particular. The low default rates of loans are evidence of the tremendous success of this program. Since the first microloan was made in 1992, the Federal government has had only one default in its loans to the intermediary loan providers. Equally impressive, the lending intermediaries have had losses of only three to five percent from small businesses, and the losses are fully covered by the mandatory loss reserve that each intermediary must maintain. Because of this successful track record, in 1997 the Congress voted to transform the Microloan program from a demonstration program to a permanent part of the array of SBA credit assistance programs.

There are currently 156 intermediaries and 19 non-lending technical assistance providers in the SBA Microloan Program. To date, the lending intermediaries have made 10,230 loans worth some $105 million. The SBA reports that for every microloan, 1.7 jobs are created. The average loan to a microentrepreneur is about $10,000, with interest rates averaging 11 percent and an average term of 39 months.

Since the microloan program was started in 1991, it has grown from 35 to 156 intermediaries. The market has also changed. Thus, as the Senate Committee on Small Business reviewed the program for reauthorization, it worked with trade associations representing microlenders, the Small Business Administration, and individual microlenders to craft legislation that would meet market needs and foster the success of the program.

Chief among those changes, in large part to reflect inflation, is increasing the maximum loan amount and average loan sizes. The maximum loan amount would increase from $25,000 to $35,000; the average loan size for each intermediary's portfolio would increase from $10,000 to $15,000. For speciality lenders, those making smaller loans and receiving additional technical assistance to make them, this legislation would raise their average loan size from $7,500 to $10,000.

There are 156 intermediaries out of the 200 Congressionally authorized. Three states—Alaska, Louisiana and Wyoming—do not have any intermediaries, though they are working to find appropriate participants. While the need for more technical assistance is partially to blame for the inability of the program to grow and add intermediaries, the industry groups, local economic development leaders and the SBA have asked Congress to expand the program. This Conference Report not only increases the appropriation for direct microloans and technical assistance for each of the next three years to allow the program to expand, but it also takes a balanced approach to increasing the number of intermediaries authorized. The House and Senate Conferees agreed to increase the number of intermediaries from 200 to 300.

TITLE III—CERTIFIED DEVELOPMENT COMPANY PROGRAM

Under the Small Business Investment Act of 1958, 504 guaranteed loans for the following public policy goals are eligible for loans guarantees up to $1,000,000:

Business district revitalization;

Eexpansion of exports;

Expansion of minority business development;

Rural development;

Enhanced economic competition;

Changes necessitated by Federal budget cutbacks; and Business restructuring arising from Federal mandated standards or policies affecting the environment or the safety and health of employees.

Both the House and Senate bill add loans to women-owned small businesses to the current list of public policy goals specified under the Act.

In August 1988, Congress approved legislation (P.L. 100-418) to increase the 504 loan guarantee ceiling to $750,000 from $500,000, except for a limited number of loans meeting the special public policy purposes. In order to adjust this amount to reflect inflation, the loan guarantee ceiling would need to be increased to approximately $1,250,000. Therefore, the Senate agreed with the position taken by the House and approved an increase to $1,000,000. The House and Senate further agreed to increase the maximum guaranteed amount on loans made to meet the public policy purposes to $1,300,000 from $1,000,000.

PROGRAM FEES

In 1995, at the urging of the SBA and the National Association of Development Companies (NADCO), the trade organization that represents the 504 lenders and Certified Development Companies (CDCs), both the House and Senate agreed to legislation mandating that the 504 program be supported entirely by fees paid by the private sector. These new fees were imposed beginning in FY 1996. Subsequently, the SBA undertook an extensive review of the performance of the 504 program, and the credit subsidy rate, which determines the amount of money that must be maintained in the loss reserve account for this program, was increased from 0.57% to 6.85%, an increase of 1200%. Since the 504 program was being funded only by fees paid by the private sector, the fees paid by the borrower in FY 1997 were increased from 0.125% to 0.875%, which placed a financial burden on 504 borrowers. The Conferees are pleased to note that since FY 1997 the credit subsidy rate estimate has dropped resulting in a decrease in borrower fees from 0.875% to 0.472% for FY 2001. The bill authorizes SBA to collect these fees to offset the credit subsidy cost through September 30, 2003.

PREMIER CERTIFIED LENDERS PROGRAM

In October 1994, Congress approved the Premier Certified Lenders Program on a pilot basis (P.L. 103-403). In December 1997, this pilot program was extended by Congress, and the limitation on the number of CDCs that could participate in the PCLP was removed (P.L. 105-135). The Senate noted the success of the program and has agreed with the House of Representatives to make the PCLP a permanent part of the 504 program. In making the PCLP pilot a permanent part of the 504 program, the Conferees expect the SBA to continue its efforts to work with the CDC community to take complete advantage of the strengths of the most successful and well-run CDCs.

ASSET SALES

In response to the plans by the SBA to undertake the sale of assets held by the Agency, the both Senate and House approved a provision that requires the SBA to notify CDCs prior to including a 504 loan in an asset sale. The Committee adopted this section in order to insure there is an open dialogue and cooperation between the Agency and the relevant CDCs. For the past four years, the Committee has encouraged the SBA to move forward with its asset sales program; however, we do not believe this step forward should necessarily harm its lending partners.

LOAN LIQUIDATION PROGRAM

In response to reports about low recoveries after the default of a 504 loan, the Congress approved legislation in 1996 to establish the Loan Liquidation Pilot Program (P.L. 104-208). The pilot liquidation program allowed up to 20 qualified CDCs to liquidate loans that they originated. It was implemented by the SBA in June 1997. The results to date for the pilot program are encouraging, and the Conferees have concluded that it is in the best interest of the 504 program to allow additional CDCs to conduct their own liquidation and foreclosure activities. The Committee is pleased to note that the recovery estimate for FY 2001 has increased for the first time since 1995. The Administration's estimate for FY 2001 is 31 percent, and the assumptions used by OMB and the SBA do not include an increase in recoveries that should result from making the Loan Liquidation Program permanent. The Conferees urge the SBA to continue its efforts and to make maximum use of the Loan Liquidation Program so that the recovery level will increase further.

A number of CDCs have demonstrated the ability through the pilot program and other lending programs in which they participate, to perform such activities, and have indicated a willingness to perform such functions to supplement SBA's activities in this area. Accordingly, the Conference Report makes the pilot liquidation program permanent and requires SBA to permit certain CDCs to foreclose and liquidate defaulted loans that they have originated under the 504 loan program.

In order to participate in the loan liquidation program, a CDC must have made at least 10 loans per year for the past three fiscal years, and it must have at least one employee with two years of liquidation experience or be a member of the Accredited Lenders Program with at least one employee with two years of liquidation experience. Representatives of either group must complete a training program developed by SBA. Participants in the pilot liquidation program and Premier Certified Lenders automatically qualify for the permanent liquidation program.

CDCs eligible to participate in liquidation activities are required to perform all liquidation and foreclosure functions pursuant to a liquidation plan approved by SBA. The Conference Report also authorizes CDCs to take other actions, in lieu of full liquidation or foreclosure, to mitigate loan losses pursuant to a workout plan. Prior to a CDC commencing liquidation or foreclosure activities and prior to engaging in other actions to mitigate loan losses, a CDC is required to provide the SBA with a liquidation plan or workout plan, as the case may be, for approval. The SBA has 15 days to approve a liquidation plan or a workout plan. The legislation further permits CDCs to litigate matters relating to their liquidation activities subject to SBA monitoring of such litigation.

SBA is authorized to suspend or revoke the authority of a CDC to liquidate loans if the CDC either does not meet the eligibility requirements or fails to comply with any statutory or regulatory requirement relating to the foreclosure or liquidation of loans or any other applicable provision of law. CDCs are also prohibited from taking any action that would result in an actual or apparent conflict of interest in connection with the liquidation of their loans.

The bill requires the SBA to submit annually to Congress a report on the results of the delegation of authority to CDCs to liquidate and foreclose loans and a comparison of such results to SBA's liquidation performance.

TITLE IV—CORRECTIONS TO THE SMALL BUSINESS INVESTMENT ACT OF 1958

DEFINITIONS

The provisions generally make some technical improvements to the operations of the SBIC Program. Under current law, national banks, member banks of the Federal Reserve, and nonmember insured banks as permitted by State law are allowed to invest in SBICs. The Senate and House Committees approved a provision to allow any Federal Savings Association to make similar investments in SBICs.

The Committees also approved a provision to clarify the what is meant by the term "long-term" as found in Section 103 of the Small Business Investment Act. It is the Committees' understanding that the SBA has construed "long term" to mean a minimum of five years for all SBIC investments other than those made to "disadvantaged businesses," when "long term" is construed to mean four years. The Committee believes the Agency's interpretation of "long-term" to be overly restrictive. Under the Generally Accepted Accounting Principles (GAAP), the accounting principles that govern business commerce in the United States, the term "long-term" is defined as any period of time greater than one year. Therefore, the Conferees have adopted a definition of "long-term" to be a period of time of not less than one year.

SUBSIDY FEES

The President's FY 2001 budget request for SBA, as amended, included a "0" credit subsidy rate for the SBIC Debenture program. The House and Senate Committees have been informed by SBA staff that the income generated by fees paid by the SBICs to SBA will actually exceed the amounts needed to fund the reserve account required under the Federal Credit Reform Act of 1990 (2 U.S.C. 661a). The Conferees believe it is important that the SBICs should not be required to pay more in fees than is necessary to bring the credit subsidy rate to "0." Therefore, the Conferees have adopted a provision, similar to the one it adopted for the 504 Development Company Program in 1996, which directs the SBA to reduce the annual fee paid by the SBIC from 1 percent to the amount necessary to reduce the credit subsidy rate to "0." The new provision applies to the SBIC Debenture and Participating Securities programs.

DISTRIBUTIONS

The Senate Committee approved a technical change that permits a qualifying SBIC to make a quarterly tax distribution any time during the applicable calendar quarter. The House passed a similar provision in H.R. 3845. Conferees concur with this provision. Under current law, SBICs may make prioritized payment distributions, profit distributions, and other optional distributions on any date with prior SBA approval. Tax distributions, however, may only be made at the end of calendar year quarters. The SBIC community has informed the Senate Committee that the practical impact of this restriction is that SBICs are forced to delay otherwise permitted interim distributions (including tax distributions) to the end of a quarter or split their distributions into two distributions. Postponing an entire distribution to the end of a quarter has negative cash flow and internal rate of return (IRR) implications. Consequently, most SBICs decide to split their distributions, making tax distributions at the end of the calendar quarter, while making all other distributions at any time during the quarter. Splitting distributions requires the preparation, submission, and SBA review of two sets of documents. The result is an inefficient use of time and resources by SBA and the SBICs.

TITLE V—REAUTHORIZATION OF SMALL BUSINESS PROGRAMS

Sec. 502. Reauthorization of Small Business Programs

Title I of the bill authorizes appropriations for SBA's business loan programs and certain other SBA programs. Included among the loan programs are Section 7(a) Guaranteed Business Loans, 504 Development Company Loans, Microloans, Disaster Loans, and Small Business Investment Company Debentures and Participating Securities.

Funding for these SBA programs is detailed in the following chart. As indicated, the bill is a three year authorization. The Conferees have carefully considered the Administration's funding request for each program as well as recommendations from small business owners, individual entrepreneurs, the lending community, and members of this Conference.

DRUG-FREE WORKPLACE PROGRAM

In 1998, the Congress enacted the Drug-Free Workplace Demonstration Program under the leadership of Senator Paul Coverdell of Georgia. The purpose of the program is to provide financial and technical assistance to small business concerns seeking to establish a drug-free workplace program. The law authorized $10 million in FY 1999 and 2000. Section 809 extends the Drug-Free Workplace Program for FY 2001, 2002 and 2003 and authorizes $5 million for each in the period. The Conference Report recognizes the important work of Senator Coverdell and names the program in his honor.

HUBZONE PROGRAM

This subsection would increase the annual authorization for the HUBZone Program to $10,000,000 for fiscal years 2001, 2002, and 2003. It is the Conferees intention that funds appropriated under the authorization in this subsection shall be used for direct HUBZone Program expenses and should not be diverted by the SBA for any other program or account that is not part of the HUBZone Program.

VERY SMALL BUSINESS PROGRAM

This section would extend the Very Small Business Program pilot. The pilot program is targeted at firms seeking to do business with the Federal government with 15 or fewer employees and with less than $1 million in annual receipts. To date, SBA has had insufficient experience and data to evaluate the program, which SBA failed to implement until March 4, 1999, more than four years after Congress enacted the program. The Conferees anticipate that new reporting requirements set forth in the Federal Procurement Data System will provide SBA with sufficient data to evaluate the program over the next three years.

SOCIALLY AND ECONOMICALLY DISADVANTAGED BUSINESSES PROGRAM

The Federal Acquisition Streamlining Act of 1994 (P.L. 103–355; 15 U.S.C. 644 note) establishes procurement procedures to help small business concerns owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals to meet certain Federal procurement goals. The procurement procedures are scheduled to terminate on September 30, 2000. The Conference Report approved an extension of the program for three years, through September 30, 2003.

COSPONSORSHIP

This program provides a means of leveraging the scarce resources at SBA, the Agency engages in a variety of cosponsorships with public and private sector organizations. Current statutory language refers only to training as a permitted cosponsored activity with for-profit entities. SBA defines training as being limited to narrower topics of interest to relatively small numbers of business owners or those in certain types of businesses. There are, however, broader business-related topics, such as the effective use of technology, e-commerce, exporting/importing, about which all small businesses should be informed and educated.

The SBA has recommended that the terms "information and education" be added to the types of assistance that can be provided to small businesses. SBA believes this change will give it the flexibility in the types of assistance that can be provided to small businesses. The Conferees agreed with the SBA's recommendation, concluding that while traditional training in these areas may also be offered, the need to reach broader audiences with timely, updated information and education is vital to the success of the largest number of small businesses.

TITLE VI: HUBZONE PROGRAM

The HUBZone program aims to direct portions of Federal contracting dollars into areas of the country that in the past have been out of the economic mainstream. HUBZone areas, which include qualified census tracts, poor rural counties, and Indian reservations, often are relatively out-of-the-way places that the stream of commerce passes by, and thus tend to be in low or moderate income areas. These areas can also include certain rural communities and tend, generally, to be low-traffic areas that do not have a reliable customer base to support business development. As a result, business has been reluctant to move into these areas. It simply has not been profitable, without a customer base to keep them operating.

The HUBZone Act seeks to overcome this problem by making it possible for the Federal government to become a customer for small businesses that locate in HUBZones. While a small business works to establish its regular customer base, a Federal contract can help it stabilize its revenues and remain profitable. This gives small business a chance to get a foothold and provides jobs to these areas. New business and new jobs mean new life and hope for these communities.

Since the HUBZone Act was adopted in the Small Business Reauthorization Act of 1997, the Small Business Administration has been implementing the program. On March 22, 1999, SBA began accepting applications from interested firms. Experience to date has revealed several difficulties with implementation, which the Senate Committee has sought to rectify in this legislation.

Subtitle A—HUBZones in Native America Act

One such problem was an unintended consequence of wording in the 1997 legislation that inadvertently excluded Indian Tribal enterprises and Alaska Native Corporations from participation. The definition of "HUBZone small business concern" specified that eligible small businesses must be 100% owned and controlled by U.S. citizens. This provision sought to insure that HUBZone benefits, financed by the American taxpayer, should be available only for U.S. beneficiaries.

However, since citizens are "born or naturalized" under the Fourteenth Amendment, ownership by citizens implies ownership by individual flesh-and-blood human beings. Corporate owners and Tribal government owners are not "born or naturalized" in the usual meanings of those terms. Thus, the Small Business Administration found that it had no authority to certify small businesses owned wholly or partly by Alaska Native Corporations and Tribal governments.

Since Native American communities were always intended to benefit from HUBZone opportunities, the Committee has included language to make such firms eligible. On many reservations, particularly the isolated ones, the only investment resources available are the Tribal governments. Excluding those governments from investing in their own reservations means, in practical terms, excluding those reservations from the HUBZone program entirely. Similarly, Alaska Native Corporations have corporate resources that are necessary to make real investments in rural Alaska and to provide jobs to Alaska Natives who currently have no hope of getting them.

The Senate Committee was guided by three broad principles in crafting this legislation. First, no firm should be made eligible solely by virtue of who it is. For example, Alaska Native Corporations will not be eligible solely because they are Alaska Native Corporations. Instead, Alaska Native Corporations and Indian Tribal enterprises should be eligible only if they agree to advance the goals of the HUBZone program: job creation and economic development in the areas that need it most.

Second, the Senate Committee sought to make the HUBZone program conform to existing Native American policy. The Committee is aware of controversy over whether to change Alaska Native policy so that Alaska Natives exercise governmental jurisdiction over their lands, just like Tribes in the Lower 48 States do on both their reservations and trust lands. The Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (ANCSA) of 1971 deliberately refrained from creating Alaska Native jurisdictions in Alaska, and this Committee's legislation is intended to conform to existing practice in ANCSA.

The third principle underlying this bill is that Alaska Natives and Indian Tribes should participate on as even a playing field as possible. Exact equivalence is not possible because the Federal relationship with Alaska Natives differs significantly from the relationship with Indian Tribes, and also because Alaska is a very different State from the Lower 48. However, ANCSA provided that Alaska Natives should be eligible to participate in Federal Indian programs "on the same basis as other Native Americans." The House Conferees have agreed to adopt the Senate provision.

Subtitle B—Other HUBZone Provisions

Subtitle B contains several technical changes to clarify interpretive issues concerning the original HUBZone Act, as well as new language to correct an unforeseen situation regarding procurement of commodities. Subtitle B makes a further amendment to the categories of eligible HUBZone firms, to include the HUBZone program as one of the tools Community Development Corporations can use in rebuilding their communities and neighborhoods.

The Conference Report includes a technical correction to the definition of "qualified census tract." It also makes two major substantive changes to the definition of "qualified nonmetropolitan county."

First, the definition is clarified to ensure that nonmetropolitan counties in the HUBZone program are those that were considered to be such as of the time of the last decennial (10 year) census. The HUBZone program relies on census tracts selected in metropolitan areas based on the last census, so that a metropolitan county—in order to have such census tracts—must have been considered metropolitan at that time. A nonmetropolitan county may be eligible as a HUBZone based on income data collected during the census or on unemployment data produced annually by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

During the ten-year period between each census, some counties become so integrated into the commercial activities of a metropolitan area that they are moved from the nonmetropolitan category to the metropolitan category. Such counties would become ineligible for HUBZone participation. They would not have been metropolitan counties at the time of the last census, so no qualified census tracts would have been selected there. They would also no longer be nonmetropolitan counties, so the income and unemployment tests available to such counties would no longer apply. Thus, counties that change from nonmetropolitan to metropolitan, in the period between each census, would become ineligible until the next census is taken. The Conference Report corrects this problem by freezing, for HUBZone purposes, the categories of metropolitan and nonmetropolitan counties as they stood at the time of the last census.

The second major change to the definition of "qualified nonmetropolitan county" is the addition of a grandfathering clause. Because the Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS) issues new county-level unemployment data annually, nonmetropolitan counties may shift into and out of eligibility on a yearly basis. The Committee believes that this type of movement is too fluid for a program that should be stable in its first few years. Companies will be confused about the merits of the program if firms lose and gain eligibility from year to year. A company will not want to invest in such a county only to have it suddenly become ineligible, due to new BLS data, before the company has even had the opportunity to recoup its investment by participating in the HUBZone program.

The legislation seeks to stabilize this situation by looking at the unemployment picture over a three-year period for nonmetropolitan counties. It also provides that companies in such a county will have a one year period to pursue HUBZone opportunities and wrap up its activities under the program, after such a county becomes ineligible due to new BLS data. A similar one year period is provided for changes that may result due to enactment of this legislation.

COMMODITIES PROCUREMENT

In 1999, the Senate Committee became aware of potential implementation problems in HUBZone procurements of certain commodities, particularly food-aid commodities purchased by the Department of Agriculture (USDA), that could lead to unintended and anti-competitive results. Because bids for commodities generally tend to fall within a narrow range of prices, the 10% price evaluation preference that currently exists could be overwhelmingly decisive. In such purchases, a handful of HUBZone firms could secure significant portions of these markets. This, in turn, could prompt other vendors to abandon these markets, thus reducing USDA's vendor base and reducing competition. These are results that would be contrary to the goals set forth in §2 of the Small Business Act.

To prevent irreparable harm to USDA's vendor base until the matter could be addressed more comprehensively in this legislation, Senator Bond sponsored a proviso in the Fiscal 2000 Agriculture Appropriations Act. As adopted in the conference report, §751 of that Act limited the price evaluation preference to 5% for up to half of the total dollar value of each commodity in a particular tender (solicitation). It also prohibited contract awards to a HUBZone firm that would be of such magnitude as to require the firm to subcontract to purchase the commodity being procured, since such a scenario would simply allow these firms to purchase commodities from subcontractors and in turn sell them to the Government at inflated prices.

The legislation seeks to address this issue on a more permanent basis. The Conferees are aware that USDA relies upon a complex computer program to evaluate commodities bids, and thus the Conference Report seeks to set a long-term policy that will not require frequent and expensive changes to this software. Although the legislation reduces the level of HUBZone program incentives that otherwise would be available under the HUBZone Act, the bill still seeks to ensure substantial awards to HUBZone concerns, while protecting existing incentives available to other types of small business concerns. The Conferees intend that these incentives help commodities procurements contribute their fair share toward achieving the Government-wide goal of 23% of prime contract dollars to small business concerns, but without the anti-competitive effects of awarding overwhelming shares of the market to HUBZone firms.

COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT CORPORATIONS

For reasons similar to the problems preventing HUBZone program participation by Indian Tribal enterprises and Alaska Native Corporations, small businesses owned by Community Development Corporations were also inadvertently made ineligible by the original HUBZone Act. The Conference Report has included a provision to correct this problem. As with Tribal enterprises and Alaska Native Corporations, addressed in Subtitle A of this Title, Community Development Corporations are not made automatically eligible. These firms must agree to advance the job-creation goals of the HUBZone program. Specifically, as other businesses must do, these enterprises must maintain their principal office in a HUBZone and employ 35% of their workforce from one or more HUBZones.

TITLE VII: NATIONAL WOMEN'S BUSINESS COUNCIL REAUTHORIZATION

The Senate bill would re-authorize the National Women's Business Council for three years, from FY 2001 to 2003, and to increase the annual appropriation from $600,000 to $1 million. The increase in funding will allow the Council to: support new and ongoing research; produce and distribute reports and recommendations prepared by the Council; and create an infrastructure to assist states in developing women's business advisory councils, coordinate summits and establish an interstate communication network. The House Conferees agree in part with the Senate's title.

The increase will also be used to assist Federal agencies meet the procurement goal for women-owned businesses established by Congress in 1994 under section 15(g) of the Small Business Act. By law, Federal agencies must strive to award women-owned small businesses at least 5 percent of the total amount of Federal prime contract dollars. The Conferees feel strongly that Federal agencies should meet the five-percent goal, and it supports the Council's plan to expand its efforts to increase the percentage of prime contracts that go to women-owned businesses. Based on current data, women are not receiving awards proportionate to their presence in the economy. For example, women-owned businesses make up 38 percent of all small businesses, yet women-owned businesses received only 2.42 percent of the $189 billion in Federal prime contracts in FY1999.

According to the National Foundation for Women Business Owners, over the past decade the number of women-owned businesses in this country has grown by 103 percent to an estimated 9.1 million firms. They generate almost $3.6 trillion in sales annually and employ more than 27.5 million workers. With the impact of women-owned businesses on our economy increasing at an unprecedented rate, Congress relies on the Council to serve as its eyes and ears as it anticipates the needs of this burgeoning entrepreneurial sector. Since it was established in 1988, the Council, which is bi-partisan, has provided important unbiased advice and counsel to Congress.

This Conference Report allows the Council to continue to perform its duties at the level it has done so far, as well as expand its activities to support initiatives that are creating the infrastructure for women's entrepreneurship at the state and local level.

TITLE VIII: MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

LOAN APPLICATION PROCESSING

The Senate Conferees agreed with the House provision directing the SBA to conduct a study in one year from the date of enactment to determine the average time SBA requires to process an SBA-guaranteed loan.

APPLICATION OF OWNERSHIP REQUIREMENTS

The Conferees agreed to a provision to clarify the impact of community property state laws to determine the eligibility for applicants for assistance under SBA's credit programs. The new provision applies to the Small Business Act and the Small Business Investment Act of 1958. It states that eligibility of an applicant under the SBA's credit programs will be determine without regard to any ownership interest of a spouse arising solely form the application of the community property laws of a State for purposes of determining marital interests.

SUBCONTRACTING PREFERENCE FOR VETERANS

The House Conferees agreed with the Senate provision to clarify that service-disabled veterans are on the same preference level as small disadvantaged businesses (SDBs) and women-owned small businesses for Federal contracting opportunities. When the Congress enacted the Veterans Entrepreneurship and Small Business Development Act (P.L. 106–50), it was not absolutely clear that the contracting preferences were to apply specifically to service-disabled veterans. The Conferees intend for this section to clear up any misunderstandings that might remain.

SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT CENTER PROGRAM FUNDING

The House Conferees agreed with the Senate provision to clarify the funding formula for States to receive funds under the Small Business Development Center (SBDC) program. This funding formula was developed in close consultation with the SBA and the SBDC association. Importantly, the formula sets forth how the minimum funding level will be applied. The Conference Agreement assures that each SBDC will receive a minimum of $500,000 annually unless the annual appropriation from Congress is less than $81,500,000. If the annual appropriation is more than $90,000,000, the minimum annual amount shall be $500,000 plus a percentage amount equal to the percentage amount by which the appropriation exceeds $90,000,000.

NATIONAL VETERANS BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION CORRECTION

The Conferees have agreed to a technical change that defers for one year the requirement that the National Veterans Business Development Corporation provide matching funds. The authorization level for the Corporation to receive Federal funds has been adjusted to the following: $4,000,000 in fiscal years 2001 and 2002, and $2,000,000 in fiscal years 2003 and 2004.

PRIVATE SECTOR RESOURCES FOR SCORE

The Committees on Small Business for the Senate and House of Representatives have followed the success and growth of the SCORE program over the past five years. Much of the success or the program is tied to its ability to obtain in-kind and monetary contributions from the private sector to supplement the annual Congressional appropriation. Companies have donated computers and Internet services to support the efforts of 14,000 SCORE volunteers to provide counseling to small businesses throughout the United States. The section approved by the Conferees makes it clear that SCORE may solicit cash and in-kind contributions from the private sector to carry out its functions under the Small Business Act.

CONTRACT DATA COLLECTION

The Senate Conferees agreed with the House Conferees to include a new section that makes improvements in the collection of data on the growing practice by Federal agencies to bundle multiple contract requirements into one large contract. This practice has had a detrimental impact on the ability of small businesses to compete for Federal contracts. The new section clarifies the definition of a bundled contract and requires the SBA to prepare an annual report for the House and Senate Committees on Small Business. The section also strengthens the ability of the Administrator of SBA to challenge an agency decision to bundle multiple contract requirements.

PROCUREMENT PROGRAM FOR WOMEN-OWNED SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS

The Senate Conferees agreed with the House Conferees to include a new section to give Federal agencies the authority to restrict competition for any contract for the procurement of goods or services by the Federal government to small businesses owned and controlled by women who are economically disadvantaged. The SBA Administrator may waive the requirement that the businesses must be owned by women who are economically disadvantaged if it is determined the business is in an industry in which small business concerns owned and controlled by women are substantially under represented.

The purpose of H.R. 5545 the "New Markets Venture Capital Program Act of 2000," is to promote economic development, wealth and job opportunities in low income (LI) areas by encouraging venture capital investments and offering technical assistance to small enterprises. The central goal of the legislation is to fulfill the unmet equity investment needs of small enterprises primarily located in LI areas.

The bill creates a developmental venture capital program by amending the Small Business Investment Act to authorize the U.S. Small Business Administration (SBA) to enter into participation agreements with 10 to 20 New Markets Venture Capital (NMVC) companies in a public/private partnership. It further authorizes SBA to guarantee debentures of NMVC companies to enable them to make venture capital investments in smaller enterprises in LI areas. And it authorizes SBA to make grants to NMVC companies, and to other entities, for the purpose of providing technical assistance to smaller enterprises that are financed, or expected to be financed, by such companies.

The Act will also enhance the ability of existing Small Business Investment Companies (SBICs) to invest in LI areas. It allows them to have access to the leverage capital authorized under the program, without entering into a participation agreement with SBA to act as an NMVC company.

Finally, enhances the ability of existing Specialized Small Business Investment Companies (SSBICs) to invest in LI areas. It allows them to have access to the operational assistance grant funds authorized under the program, also without entering into a participation agreement with SBA to act as an NMVC company.

Despite our unprecedented economic prosperity, there remain places in America that have yet to reap the benefits of this prosperity. Although many Americans enjoy strong income and wage growth, millions in underserved areas still do not have access to jobs or entrepreneurial opportunities.

For example, between 1997 and 1998, the median income for the nation's households rose 3.5 percent in real terms. Yet 12.7 percent of Americans (34.5 million people) still live below the poverty level. These 34.5 million people live in the inner cities and rural areas of America, where jobs are scarce and there is little to attract would-be small business investors.

The overall poverty rate for the U.S. in 1998 was 12.7 percent, but the poverty rate among both African American and Latino populations was 26 percent—double the national average. In rural communities, poverty remains a persistent problem. Job growth is well below the national average, with unemployment hovering at or above 14%. Additionally, the unemployment levels in many urban communities range from 7.5% for African Americans to 6.4% for Hispanics. Both are nearly double the national average.

It is not enough to merely create jobs in these pockets of poverty. Rather, we must create a small business backbone, an economic infrastructure to enable these communities to develop their full potential and participate fully in the economic mainstream.

H.R. 5545 uses SBA resources targeted to corporations and small businesses that want to do business in the untapped markets of our underserved communities. It is a wise investment in the hopes of millions of families who are not sharing in the American Dream.

There is a pressing need for this legislation. There are virtually no institutional sources of equity capital in distressed communities. The national venture capital industry for community development comprises only 25 firms managing approximately $157 million. Only 14 of those are capitalized at $5 million or more—the absolute minimum for economic viability.

H.R. 5545 will tap unrealized resources in our nation, thus benefiting our economy as a whole. It will increase the attractiveness of investment in places with high unemployment and too few businesses. The more the business community knows about these new markets, the more likely they will invest in them—and the more businesses that invest in these new markets, the more these areas will share in our nation's economic prosperity. This legislation provides a road map for the next generation to succeed, and it makes good sense from both a public policy and business standpoint.

H.R. 5545 will add the following new sections to the Small Business Investment Act:

Section 351. Definitions

Establishes definitions for developmental venture capital, New Markets Venture Capital Companies, low- or moderate-income geographic area, operational assistance, participation agreement, and Specialized Small Business Investment Companies as used in the legislation.

"Developmental venture capital" is defined as equity capital invested in small businesses, with a primary objective of fostering economic development in low income geographic areas. For the purposes of this Act, the Committee considers equity capital investments to mean stock of any class in a corporation, stock options, warrants, limited partnership interests, membership interests in a limited liability company, joint venture interests, or subordinated debt with equity features if such debt provides only for interest payments contingent upon earnings. Such investments must not require amortization. They may be guaranteed; but neither the Equity capital investment nor the guarantee may be secured.

A "New Markets Venture Capital Company" is defined as a company that has been approved by the Administration to operate under the New Markets Venture Capital Program, and has entered into a participation agreement with the Administration to make equity investments and provide technical assistance to small enterprises located in low- or moderate-income areas.

The term "low income geographic area" means a census tract, or the equivalent county division as defined by the Bureau of the Census for purposes of defining poverty areas, in which the poverty rate is not less than 20 percent. In those areas in a metropolitan area 50 percent or more of the households must have an income equal to less than 60 percent of the median income for the area. In rural areas the median household income for a tract must not exceed 80 percent of the statewide median household income. This definition also includes any area located within a HUBZone, an Urban Empowerment Zone or an Urban Enterprise Community, or a rural Empowerment Zone or a Rural Enterprise Community.

The term "low income individual" is included for the purpose of allowing waivers of the low income area requirement for areas of significant economic disadvantage that may not otherwise qualify. A low income individual is defined as someone whose income does not exceed 80 percent of the area median income in metropolitan areas, or 80 percent of either the area or statewide median income in rural areas.

The term "operational assistance" is defined as management, marketing, and other technical assistance that assists a small business concern with business development.

"Participation agreement" is defined as an agreement between the Administration and an NMVC Company detailing the company's operating plan and investment criteria; and requiring that investments be made in smaller enterprises at least 80 percent of which are located in low income geographic areas.

"Specialized Small Business Investment Company" means any small business investment company that was licensed under section 301(d) as in effect before September 30, 1996.

Section 352. Purposes

Describes the purposes of the Act, which are:

(1) to promote economic development and the creation of wealth and job opportunities in low- or moderate-income geographic areas and among individuals living in such areas by encouraging developmental venture capital investments in smaller enterprises primarily located in such areas; and

(2) to establish a developmental venture capital program, with the mission of addressing the unmet equity investment needs of small entrepreneurs locate in low- or moderate-income areas; to be administered by the Small Business Administration; to enter into a participation agreement with NMVC companies; to guarantee debentures of NMVC companies to enable each such company to make developmental venture capital investments in smaller enterprises in low- or moderate-income geographic areas; and to make grants to NMVC companies for the purpose of providing operational assistance to smaller enterprises financed, or expected to be financed, by such companies.

Section 353. Establishment

Authorizes the SBA to establish the NMVC Program, under which the SBA may form New Markets Venture Capital companies by entering into participation agreements with firms that are granted final approval under the requirements set forth in Section 354 and formed for the purposes outlined in Section 352.

This Section also authorizes SBA to guarantee the debentures issued by the NMVC Companies as provided in Section 355; and to make operational assistance grants to NMVC Companies and other entities in accordance with Section 358.

Section 354. Selection of the New Markets Venture Capital Companies

Establishes the criteria to be followed by SBA in selecting the NMVC Companies. This section provides for specific selection criteria to be developed by the SBA—based on the criteria enumerated in this legislation—and designed to ensure that a variety of investment models are chosen and that appropriate public policy goals are addressed. Geographic dispersion must also be taken into account in the selection process.

H.R. 5545 requires Program participants to satisfy the following application requirements:

(1) Each NMVC must be a newly formed, for-profit entity with at least $5 million of contributed capital or binding capital commitments from non-Federal investors, and with the primary objective of economic development in low- or moderate-income geographic areas.

(2) Each NMVC's management team must be experienced in some form of community development or venture capital financing.

(3) Each NMVC must concentrate its activities on serving its investment areas, and submit a proposal that will expand economic opportunities and address the unmet capital needs within the investment areas.

(4) Each applicant must submit a strong proposal to provide operational assistance, including the possible use of outside, licensed professionals.

(5) Each NMVC must have binding commitments (in cash or in-kind) for operational assistance and overhead, payable or available over a multi-year period not to exceed 10 years, in an amount equal to 30% of its committed and contributed capital. These commitments may be from any non-SBA source and the cash portion may be invested in an annuity payable semi-annually over a multi-year period not to exceed 10 years.

The Committee is well aware that it will be difficult for some NMVCs to raise their entire operational assistance match during the application stage. Those NMVCs that are unable to raise the required match, but have submitted a reasonable plan to the Administrator to meet the requirement, may be granted a conditional approval from the Administrator and be allowed to draw one dollar of federal matching funds for every dollar of private funds raised provided that (for the purpose of final approval) they raise at least 20 percent of the required matching funds, and have at least 20 percent of the match on hand when applying for additional grant funds.

The Committee believes that it is important to give NMVCs the flexibility to obtain the required private operational assistance funds, however, from a safety and soundness standpoint, federal assistance funds should not be placed at greater risk than private assistance funds.

This conditional approval shall be made with the expectation that the required capital funding commitments will be obtained within two years of the conditional approval.

The bill also authorizes SBA to select firms that have experience with investing in enterprises located in low income areas to participate as NMVCs. SBA will enter into an agreement with each NMVC setting forth the specific terms of that firm's participation in the program. Each agreement will be tailored to the particular NMVC's operations and will be based on the NMVC's own proposal, submitted as part of the NMVC's application form. The agreement will require that investments be made by the NMVC in smaller enterprises, at least 80% of which are located in low income geographic areas.

In order for an investment to be counted toward the 80% goal under H.R. 5545, the investment must be made in a small business concern located in an LI area. This ensures that the New Markets Venture Capital Company Program will focus investment capital where it is most needed, rather than duplicating existing SBA programs.

The Committee believes that the targeting of low-income communities is the most important element of H.R. 4530. If Congress and the Administration are serious about helping our nation's low-income cities, towns, and rural areas we should demonstrate our commitment by ensuring that this bill is focused on these areas. The Committee has accomplished this by requiring that 80% of all investment will concentrate on those needing this help the most.

By clearly focusing this legislation on the communities that need assistance the most, the Committee has maximized the impact of this program. It is also the Committee's view that by investing the majority of funds in low income communities, we will not only provide the benefit of increased opportunities for working families, but H.R. 4530 will also provide the benefit of improving the physical community. This double benefit ensures that the resources spent under H.R. 4530 will provide the maximum economic impact on the low- or moderate-income communities to which this bill is targeted.

The Committee recognizes that the legislation may offer some benefits to working families located outside of the LMI areas as defined by the legislation. To address this concern, up to 20% of a New Markets Venture Capital Company's investments are permitted in those businesses that are in need of equity investment, but fall outside the LMI areas as defined by the legislation. However, it is the Committee's strong opinion that to reduce the targeting below 80% would significantly diminish the impact in the LMI areas, and would be contrary to the intent of the program. In addition, the Act includes a provision allowing the Administrator to waive the low income designation requirements for areas of significant economic distress that would not otherwise qualify.

Section 355. Debentures

Authorizes SBA to guarantee debentures issued by NMVC companies. The terms of the guaranteed debentures issued under this section may not exceed 15 years and the maximum total guarantee for any NMVC company shall not exceed 150 percent a company's private capital.

Section 356. Issuance and guarantee of trust certificates

Authorizes SBA to issue and guarantee trust certificates representing ownership of all or part of the debentures issued by an NMVC company and guaranteed by the Administration. Each guarantee issued under this section is limited to the amount of the principal and interest on the guaranteed debentures that compose the trust or pool of certificates.

This section grants SBA subrogation and ownership rights over the trust certificates guaranteed under this section, but prohibits SBA from collecting a fee for any guarantee of a trust certificate issued under this section. Finally, this section allows SBA to contract with an agent to carry out the pooling and central registration functions for the trust certificates issued.

Section 357. Fees

Authorizes SBA to charge such fees as it deems appropriate with respect to any guarantee or grant issued to an NMVC company.

This authorization is subject to the prohibition contained in Section 356 that prohibits SBA from collecting a fee for any guarantee of a trust certificate issued under that section.

Section 358. Operational assistance grants

Authorizes SBA to make operational assistance grants to New Markets Venture Capital Companies established under the legislation and to certain Specialized Small Business Investment Companies.

Each NMVC is eligible for one or more grants, on a matching basis, in an amount equal to the amount the NMVC makes available for operational assistance. The operational assistance grant will be made available to the NMVC semi-annually over a multi-year period not to exceed 10 years. SBA is also authorized to provide supplemental grants to NMVCs.

This section of the bill also allows Specialized Small Business Investment Companies ("SSBICs") access to the operational assistance grant funds authorized under the program without entering into a participation agreement with SBA to act as an NMVC company. The participation of the SSBICs, however, is limited only to investments they make in LMI areas after the date of enactment, and they must match the operational assistance funds to one LMI investment.

This section of the bill explicitly prohibits NMVCs and SSBICs from using operational assistance grants, both the federal contribution and the match, to supplement their own bottom line. This prohibition includes items that are not aimed at directly benefiting the small enterprises, such as, but not limited to—the purchase of furniture, office supplies, physical improvements to the NMVCs' or SSBICs' places of business, and marketing services. The Committee included this limitation to ensure that the investments made through this program will be for the benefit of small businesses located in LMI areas, which is the intent of the legislation.

It is the Committee's view that this provision does allow for operational assistance funds under the legislation to be used for salaries of those NMVC or SSBIC employees that are providing direct technical assistance to the small enterprise. NMVCs and SSBICs that use their own staff to provide the necessary direct assistance to smaller enterprises may be reimbursed for the direct cost of staff out of grant funds, but only to the extent such costs are allocable to the operational assistance.

This section also requires the NMVC companies to document in their operation plan the extent to which they intend to use licensed professionals (e.g., licensed attorneys and Certified Public Accountants) when providing technical assistance that requires such expertise. This ensures that the NMVC companies will provide the best assistance possible to the small business concerns. It is not meant to be construed as requirement that licensed professional are sole persons to provide such assistance, but their use is encouraged is highly technical situations.

Evidence presented to the Congress by the community development venture capital advocates indicates that providing technical assistance to a small business dramatically increases that business' chance of success. The Congress wishes to ensure that all small businesses receiving technical assistance under this program will receive the best technical assistance available. We believe this will further increase the businesses' chances of success.

Section 359. Bank participation

Allows any national bank, and any member bank of the Federal Reserve System to invest in an NMVC company formed under this legislation so long as the investment would not exceed 5 percent of the capital and surplus of the bank.

Banks that are not members of the federal Reserve system are allowed to invest in an NMVC company formed under this legislation so long as such investment is allowed under applicable State law, and so long as the investment would not exceed 5 percent of the capital and surplus of the bank.

Section 360. Federal financing bank

Establishes that Section 318 of the Small Business Investment Act does not apply to any NMVC Company created under this legislation.

Section 361. Reporting requirements

Establishes reporting requirements for the NMVC Companies. Specifically, the NMVC companies are required to provide to SBA such information as the Administration requires, including: information related to the measurement criteria that the NMVC proposed in its program application; and, for each case in which the NMVC makes an investment or a grant to a business located outside of an LMI area, a report on the number and percentage of employees of the business who reside in an LMI area.

Section 362. Examinations

Requires that each NMVC company shall be subjected to examinations made at the direction of the Investment Division of SBA. This section allows for examinations to be conducted with the assistance of a private sector entity that has both the necessary qualifications and expertise.

It is the intent of the Committee that the oversight of the NMVC program be modeled after that developed for the SBIC program and administered by SBA's Investment Division. Oversight should include a close working relationship between SBA analysts and NMVC management teams, detailed reporting requirements, frequent on-site examinations to evaluate performance and conformance with the operating plan, and careful analysis of the firm's economic impact.

Section 363. Injunctions and other orders

Grants SBA the power of injunction over NMVC companies and the authority to act as a trustee or receiver of a company if appointed by a court.

This section of the legislation closely tracks the existing injunction provision (Section 311) of the Small Business Investment Act of 1958. Again, it is the Committee's intent that oversight of the NMVC program be modeled after that developed for the SBIC program and administered by SBA's Investment Division. This oversight should include a close working relationship between SBA analysts and NMVC management teams, detailed reporting requirements, frequent on-site examinations to evaluate performance and conformance with the operating plan, and careful analysis of the firm's economic impact.

Section 364. Additional penalties for noncompliance

Grants SBA or the Attorney General the authority to file a cause of action against an NMVC company for non-compliance. Should a court find that a company violated or failed to comply with provisions of this legislation or other provisions of the Small Business Investment Act of 1958, this section grants SBA the authority to void the participation agreement between the company and the SBA.

Section 365. Unlawful acts and omissions; breach of fiduciary duty

Defines what is to be considered as a violation of this legislation, who is considered to have a fiduciary duty, and who is ineligible to serve as an officer, director, or employee of any NMVC company because of unlawful acts.

This section of the legislation closely tracks the unlawful acts provision (Section 314) of the Small Business Investment Act of 1958. It is the Committee's intent to grant SBA the same authority over NMVC companies that it has over Small Business Investment Companies with respect to unlawful acts and the breach of fiduciary responsibility.

Section 366. Removal or suspension of directors or officers

Grants SBA the authority to use the procedures set forth in Section 313 of the Small Business Investment Act of 1958 to remove or suspend any director or officer of an NMVC company.

Section 367. Regulations

Authorizes the Small Business Administration to issue such regulations as it deems necessary to carry out the provisions of the legislation.

Section 368. Authorization of appropriations

Authorizes appropriations for the Program for Fiscal Years 2001 through 2006. This section authorizes such subsidy budget authority as necessary to guarantee $150,000,000 of debentures and $30,000,000 to make operational assistance grants.

The Committee estimates that the Program will only require a one-time appropriation of $45 million—$15 million for loan guarantees and $30 million for operational assistance grants. This $15 million will allow SBA to back $150 million in loans to small business in low- or moderate-income areas.

Section 368(c). Conforming amendment

Makes a conforming change to the Small Business Investment Act of 1958 to account for the changes made by this legislation.

Section 368(d). Calculation of maximum amount of SBIC leverage

Allows Small Business Investment Companies ("SBICs") to obtain additional access to leverage outside the statutory caps. The exemption of the SBICs, however, is limited only to investments they make in LMI areas.

This section provides that investments made in LI areas will not apply against the leverage cap of the individual SBIC as long as the total amount invested through the program does not exceed 50% of the SBIC's paid-in capital.

Section 368(e). Bankruptcy exemption for new markets venture capital companies

Adds NMVC companies to the list of entities that may not be considered a debtor under a Title 11 bankruptcy proceeding.

Section 368(f). Federal savings associations

Amends the "Home Owners Loan Act" to allow federal savings associations to invest in an NMVC company formed under this legislation so long as the investment would not exceed 5 percent of the capital and surplus of the savings association.

SEC. 903. BUSINESSLINC

H.R. 5545, also establishes the BusinessLINC program, designed to promote business growth in inner cities and economically distressed rural areas by matching large and small firms into business-to-business partnering and mentoring relationships. BusinessLinc would accomplish this by providing seed funding to third party entities such as local Chambers of Commerce to promote such relationships. In addition to seed funding, such entities will also receive funds for technical assistance programs to small businesses to supplement the mentor-protégé relationships established as a result of BusinessLINC.

BusinessLINC helps businesses by providing online information and a database of companies that are interested in mentor-protégé programs.

Grants may be made to a coalition/combination of private and public entities only if the coalition/combination provides an amount, either in kind or in cash, equal to the grant amount for the purposes above.

Despite the unprecedented economic prosperity we are experiencing in this country, there are several areas of the country that have still not achieved parity. These areas are primarily inner cities, rural areas, and Native American communities. BusinessLINC will enable business opportunities for small businesses who would otherwise have no access to outside larger markets. While these small businesses have strong potential, they are located in communities where corporate America would not necessarily look. BusinessLINC will break that barrier. When the BusinessLINC model has been applied in the past, small businesses have seen growth as much as 45 percent. With this assistance, the local community will be charting its own path to recovery. The "LINC" in BusinessLINC stands for "Learning, Information, Networking, and Collaboration."

SECTION BY SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1. Short title

Designates the bill as the "BusinessLINC Act of 2000."

Section 2. Authorization

This Section amends the Small Business Act by Adding a new paragraph (m), "BusinessLINC grants and cooperative agreements."

Paragraph (1) allows the Administrator to make grants or enter into cooperative agreements with any coalition/combination of private and/or public entities to (a) promote business-to-business relationships between large and small businesses and (b) to provide online information and a database of companies that are interested in mentor-protégé programs.

It is the opinion of the Conference that private and/or public entities eligible for grants should be limited to chambers of commerce and other not-for-profit business organizations. The Conferees intend that grant money be provided to large businesses. Further, if a grant is made to a combination of entities, one entity must take a lead position.

It is further the opinion of the Conference that promotion of business-to-business relationships between large and small businesses referenced in paragraph (a) above should include the facilitation of such relationships as mentor-protégé, prime/subcontractor, and teaming.

The Conference intends that an element to be considered by the Administrator when evaluating a grant proposal, shall be the training of small businesses or "proteges." An additional evaluation element intended by the Conference shall be measurable goals to be achieved through the business-to-business partnerships.

The Conference further intends that the online database referenced in paragraph (b) above, should make use of the SBA's current PRO-Net database to the greatest extent practicable. The Conference is concerned that online privacy issues should also be addressed by the SBA in the implementation of the databases. Further, it is the Committee's opinion that the databases should be vigilantly maintained by the SBA to ensure that only firms eligible to be mentors should be included in the mentor database, and only those firms eligible to serve as intermediaries should be included in the intermediary database.

Paragraph (2) specifies that the Administrator may make grants as long as the coalition/combination of public and/or private entities provides an amount, either in kind or in cash, equal to the grant amount for the purposes delineated in paragraph (1) above.

The Conference is well aware that it may be difficult for some entities to raise their entire match during the application stage. Those entities that are unable to raise the required match, but have submitted to the Administrator a reasonable plan to meet the requirement, may be granted a conditional approval from the Administrator and be allowed to draw one dollar of federal matching funds for every dollar of private funds raised. This conditional approval shall be made with the expectation that the required funding commitments will be obtained within two years of the conditional approval.

The Conference believes that it is important to give entities the flexibility to obtain the required private operational assistance funds, however, from a safety and soundness standpoint, federal funds should not be placed at greater risk than private capital.

Paragraph (3) specifies the authorization for the program for fiscal years 2001 through 2003. This amount shall be $6,600,000 for each of the three fiscal years.

FEDERAL PAYMENT TO THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA COURTS

Appropriates $105,000,000 instead of $99,500,000 as proposed by the House and $109,080,000 as proposed by the Senate and allocates $7,409,000 for the District of Columbia Court of Appeals instead of $7,709,000 as proposed by the House and the Senate and $71,121,000 for the District of Columbia Superior Court instead of $72,399,000 as proposed by the House and the Senate and $17,890,000 for the Court System instead of $16,892,000 as proposed by the House and $17,892,000 as proposed by the Senate. The appropriated amount includes (1) $5,255,000 to finance a pay adjustment of 8.48 percent for non-judicial employees as proposed by the Senate, and (2) $3,325,000 for capital improvements of which $825,000 is for roofing repairs to the Old Courthouse instead of $2,500,000 for capital improvements as proposed by the House and $5,825,000 for capital improvements of which $825,000 is for roofing repairs to the Old Courthouse as proposed by the Senate. The conference agreement retains the proviso concerning the purchase, installation and operation of an Integrated Justice Information System as proposed by the House.

DEFENDER SERVICES IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA COURTS

Appropriates $34,387,000 as proposed by the House instead of $38,387,000 as proposed by the Senate and makes conforming technical changes.

FEDERAL PAYMENT TO THE COURT SERVICES AND OFFENDER SUPERVISION

AGENCY FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Appropriates $112,527,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $115,752,000 as proposed by House and allocates $67,521,000 for Community Supervision and Sex Offender Registration as proposed by the Senate instead of $69,871,000 as proposed by the House, and $26,228,000 for the Pretrial Services Agency as proposed by the Senate instead of $27,103,000 as proposed by the House. The conference agreement also requires that $17,854,000 of this appropriation, of which $836,000 is for the Public Defender Service, be used to improve pretrial defendant and post-conviction offender supervision, to enhance drug testing and sanctions-based treatment programs and other treatment services, to expand intermediate sanctions and offender reentry programs, to continue planning and design proposals for a residential sanctions center, and to make improvements in the administrative infrastructure including information technology instead of $22,161,000 of which $836,000 is for the Public Defender Service as proposed by the House. The conference agreement inserts language as proposed by the Senate to allow the agency to use funds for the transfer and hire of motor vehicles. The conferees direct that vehicles be provided directly by the General Services Administration and not by a third party leasing company.

FEDERAL PAYMENT FOR WASHINGTON INTERFAITH NETWORK

Appropriates $1,000,000 as proposed by the House to the Washington Interfaith Network to reimburse the Network for costs incurred in carrying out preconstruction activities at the former Fort Dupont Dwellings and Additions.

FEDERAL PAYMENT FOR PLAN TO SIMPLIFY EMPLOYEE

COMPENSATION SYSTEMS

Appropriates $250,000 to the Mayor as proposed by the House to contract for the study and development of a plan to simplify the pay and compensation systems and schedules and work rules that currently apply to employees of the District of Columbia. Simplifying the pay and compensation systems and schedules and work rules should result in significant savings to District taxpayers and make the District government's operations more efficient.

The conferees agree that the solicitation for the contract is to provide that any contract awarded under the solicitation require that the contractor submit a plan to the Mayor and the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations that includes, at a minimum, certain specific elements. The first of these is a review of the current pay and compensation systems and schedules and work rules that apply to employees of the District of Columbia. Second, the plan the contractor develops must contain a review of the best practices of state and local governments and other appropriate organizations regarding pay and compensation systems. The conferees recognize that a substantial number of District employees are members of employee unions; therefore, a review of best practices should focus on state and local governments and other organizations that have similarly unionized workforces. Third, the plan must contain a proposal for simplifying pay and compensation systems and schedules that apply to employees of the District of Columbia. Finally, the contractor's plan must contain an estimated timeframe for completion and strategies for implementing the plan, including identification of any statutory, contractual, or other barriers to implementation. Included in the discussion of barriers should be discussion of mitigating strategies and a recognition of the potential barrier of collective bargaining agreements to the successful implementation of a simplified pay system. This section applies to all employees of the District of Columbia, including employees of all independent agencies, school board employees and employees of District agencies currently in receivership and other agencies, but does not apply to employees who work in the District court system.

The Mayor is to develop a proposed solicitation within 90 days of enactment of this Act and submit a copy to the Comptroller General for his review at least 90 days prior to issuance of the proposed solicitation. The Comptroller General shall, within 45 days after receipt of the copy of the proposed solicitation, review it to ensure that it adequately addresses all of the elements required by this section and report to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations the results of his review. The conferees expect the District government to supplement this amount, if necessary, with local funds, and for the Mayor to allocate the contract cost as he deems appropriate.

METRORAIL CONSTRUCTION

Appropriates $25,000,000 in Federal funds for a contribution to the Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority as proposed by the Senate instead of $25,000,000 of which $17,900,000 would be by transfer as proposed by the House and inserts language concerning the release of the funds and the application of 49 U.S.C. 5309(a)(2) to this project as proposed by the Senate. The conferees agree that this contribution is contingent upon the District government setting aside $25,000,000 in its capital budget for the project and establishing a special taxing district for the neighborhood of the proposed Metrorail site to contribute an additional $25,000,000. The conferees note that the commitment of $25,000,000 has not been secured by the establishment of a special taxing district. Until this funding has been secured, the Federal funds appropriated under this heading are to be held by the U.S. Treasury. The conferees agree that this appropriation is not to be considered a one-third contribution to this project and do not plan to revise the Federal contribution to reflect a percentage contribution. The conferees direct the Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority to closely monitor the development of this project, especially the cost containment issues, and will hold the Authority responsible and accountable.

FEDERAL PAYMENT FOR NATIONAL MUSEUM OF AMERICAN MUSIC

Deletes the paragraph appropriating $250,000 to the Federal City Council for planning costs for a National Museum of American Music proposed by the House and deleted by the Senate. The conferees have not recommended additional funding for the National Museum of American Music. The President's budget proposal includes $3,000,000 to fund the staff, consultants, design, environmental assessments and preparation of Request for Proposals to complete the planning phase of the museum.

In the District of Columbia Appropriations Act for fiscal year 1999 (Public Law 105–277), the Federal City Council, a private, non-profit organization, received $300,000 to conduct a needs and design study for a National Museum of American Music. Although the needs and design study has not been completed, the scope of the envisioned project has expanded to a multi-million dollar, mixed-use development that would include, in addition to the Museum, performance and entertainment venues, retail and dining facilities, hotels and housing, a performing arts theater, and an elementary school. The Federal City Council and other interested parties have targeted the current Washington Convention Center site as the preferred location for the development.

The conferees have determined that additional funding of the project is premature. First, local District officials have not had an opportunity to review and analyze the proposed project. Nor has the District government made a financial commitment to this project. Also at issue is whether the project envisioned by the Federal City Council constitutes the highest and best use of the real estate under consideration. Finally, the conferees have not been provided with a detailed analysis of the project scope and all potential funding sources.

The conferees direct the General Accounting Office to review the National Museum of American Music project proposal and report to the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and the House by April 1, 2001, on: (1) total project cost estimates; (2) all potential project funding sources (including local District, Federal, and private funding sources); (3) an analysis of whether the proposed project is suited for the site of the current Convention Center; and (4) whether it constitutes the highest and best use of the property at issue. The conferees encourage the staff of the Library of Congress and the Smithsonian to collaborate with the staff of the Federal City Council in the preparation of this report. The requested data will enable the Committees to more carefully analyze the appropriateness of continued Federal funding.

FEDERAL PAYMENT FOR BROWNFIELD REMEDIATION

Appropriates $3,450,000 for environmental and infrastructure costs at Poplar Point as proposed by the Senate. The conference agreement allocates $2,150,000 for environmental assessment, site remediation and wetlands restoration of the 11 acres of real property under the jurisdiction of the District of Columbia and no more than $1,300,000 for infrastructure costs for an entrance to Anacostia Park as proposed by the Senate. The conference action also prohibits the use of any of these funds to purchase private property in the Poplar Point area as proposed by the Senate. The conferees note that in addition to the $3,450,000 provided under this heading, $4,615,000 in Federal funds appropriated for infrastructure needs in Public Law 105–277 (112 Stat. 2681–552.3) has also been allocated to the Poplar Point project.

PRESIDENTIAL INAUGURATION

Appropriates $5,961,000 as proposed by the House instead of $6,211,000 as proposed by the Senate to reimburse the District government for expenses incurred in connection with presidential inauguration activities.

CHILDREN'S NATIONAL MEDICAL CENTER

Appropriates $500,000 for a Federal contribution to the Children's National Medical Center to be used for the network of satellite pediatric health clinics for children and families in underserved neighborhoods and communities in the District.

CHILD ADVOCACY CENTER

Appropriates $500,000 for a Federal contribution to the Child Advocacy Center for its Safe Shores program. The conferees are concerned with the inadequate treatment received by young victims of abuse and neglect. Safe Shores is the District's only Child Advocacy Center and serves an ever-growing population of maltreated children in the District of Columbia. Safe Shores is equipped with clinicians trained to work specifically with children to help facilitate resolution and healing for the young victims of abuse and neglect. Safe Shores works with the Metropolitan Police Department and the Child and Family Services Agency as an integral part of the multidisciplinary child welfare team in the District and is vital to effective intervention and case management. The conferees are disturbed by the lack of financial support offered the Center by the District's current administration, particularly in light of recent discoveries by the General Accounting Office of the crisis situation of the District's child welfare system.

ST. COLETTA OF GREATER WASHINGTON EXPANSION PROJECT

Appropriates $1,000,000 for a Federal contribution to St. Coletta of Greater Washington, Inc., for costs associated with the establishment of a day program and comprehensive case management services for mentally retarded and multiple-handicapped adolescents and adults in the District of Columbia, including property acquisition and construction. The facility will be located at 212 M Street, S.E., and will provide vocational and functional life skills training, speech/language therapy, occupational therapy, physical therapy and behavior management to 100 adolescents and 50 adults.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA SPECIAL OLYMPICS

Appropriates $250,000 for a Federal contribution to the District of Columbia Special Olympics which provides a year-round 15-sport program serving 2,500 mentally and developmentally disabled children and adults in the District.

FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION FOR ENFORCEMENT OF LAW BANNING POSSESSION OF TOBACCO PRODUCTS BY MINORS

The conference agreement appropriates $100,000 under section 151 of the general provisions to the Metropolitan Police Department on the condition that the District government enacts into law a ban on the possession of tobacco products by minors as specified in section 151. The funds are to be used by the Department to enforce the ban.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA FUNDS

OPERATING EXPENSES

DIVISION OF EXPENSES

Inserts an additional exception to the spending ceiling for operating expenses to reflect the reserve fund and provides that operating expenses for the District for fiscal year 2001 shall not exceed $5,677,379,000 of which $172,607,000 is from intra-District funds and $3,250,783,000 is from local funds instead $5,689,176,000 of which $192,804,000 is from intra-District funds and $3,245,523,000 is from local funds as proposed by the House and $5,546,536,000 of which $192,804,000 is from intra-District funds and $3,096,383,000 is from local funds as proposed by the Senate. The changes in the amounts reflect actions taken by the conferees in the funding levels under the various appropriation headings.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY AND MANAGEMENT ASSISTANCE AUTHORITY

Appropriates $3,140,000 from other funds instead of $3,140,000 from local funds as proposed by the House and $6,500,000 from other funds as proposed by the Senate. The conference agreement retains the proviso concerning the cap on the salary levels of the Executive Director and the General Counsel as proposed by the House and inserts a proviso that limits severance or bonus payments and payments under agreements in effect before the enactment of this Act to two weeks for each full year of employment with the Authority. The severance payments are only for employees who are employed by the Authority during the entire period which begins on the date of the enactment of this Act and ends on September 30, 2001. An employee who leaves prior to September 30, 2001 is not entitled to any payment other than their regular salary for services performed prior to separation and a payment for unused regular annual leave accrued by the individual. The conferees believe the severance allowance recommended is generous.

GOVERNMENTAL DIRECTION AND SUPPORT

Appropriates $195,771,000 including $162,172,000 from local funds instead of $194,521,000 including $160,922,000 from local funds as proposed by the House and $194,271,000 including $160,672,000 from local funds as proposed by the Senate. The conference agreement deletes (1) the proviso proposed by the Senate regarding the use of freed-up appropriations and (2) the proviso proposed by the House that would have restricted the availability of funds for the Maximus, Inc., revenue recovery services contract GF 98104. The conference agreement includes language that provides the Office of the Chief Technology Officer with small purchase procurement authority of $500,000 as proposed by the House.

Office of the Mayor.—The conference agreement provides $7,467,000 instead of $5,967,000 provided by the House and $7,217,000 provided by the Senate. The allowance recommended by the conferees includes $1,500,000 in Federal funds to remain available until expended as proposed by the Senate for the commercial revitalization program and $250,000 in Federal funds as proposed by the House for the study and development of a plan to simplify the pay and compensation systems and schedules and work rules that currently apply to employees of the District of Columbia. A discussion of the requirements and expectations regarding the plan to simplify the District's pay and compensation systems can be found earlier in this report under "Federal Payment for Plan to Simplify Employee Compensation Systems". The Mayor's request of $10,717,000 was adjusted to exclude $5,000,000 for the one-time appropriation in fiscal year 2000 for the commercial revitalization program. The conference agreement includes language as proposed by the Senate that makes the $5,000,000 available until expended.

Office of the Chief Financial Officer.—The conference agreement includes an increase of $1,250,000 in Federal funds appropriated earlier in this Act for the Office of the Chief Financial Officer instead of $1,500,000 as proposed by the House. The allowance includes $250,000 for payment to a mentoring program and for hotline services; $250,000 for payment to a character education initiative; $250,000 for a program to provide basic values training in the local public schools; and $500,000 for the design, construction, and maintenance of a trash rack system to mitigate environmental harm caused by trash carried in city runoff which flows through the National Arboretum via the Hickey Run Watershed into the Anacostia River. Instructions to the Chief Financial Officer on the payment of these amounts are included under Federal Funds earlier in this report.

St. Elizabeths Hospital.—The conference agreement inserts a proviso that requires the Chief Financial Officer to submit a study by March 1, 2001, to the Committees on Appropriations of the House and the Senate on the merits and potential of privatizing the operation and administration of St. Elizabeths Hospital.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT AND REGULATION

The conference agreement deletes the proviso proposed by the Senate regarding the use of freed-up appropriations.

PUBLIC SAFETY AND JUSTICE

Appropriates $762,546,000 including $591,565,000 from local funds instead of $762,346,000 including $591,365,000 from local funds as proposed by the House and the Senate. The increase of $200,000 reflects two Federal payments of $100,000 each appropriated elsewhere in this Act and described below.

Youth safe haven.—The conference agreement provides $100,000 in Federal funds for a youth safe haven police mini-station program to be established in coordination with the Milton S. Eisenhower Foundation. The program creates youth safe havens in which nonprofit groups work with young people after school in public housing, other low-income neighborhoods and middle schools in the District of Columbia.

Tobacco possession by minors.—The conference agreement provides $100,000 in Federal funds included in section 151 of the general provisions to the Metropolitan Police Department on the condition that the District government enacts into law a ban on the possession of tobacco products by minors as specified in section 151. The funds are to be used by the Department to enforce the ban.

Other.—The conference agreement includes a proviso that caps the number of police officers assigned to the Mayor's security detail at 15 as proposed by the Senate and deletes the proviso proposed by the Senate regarding the use of freed-up appropriations. The conference agreement also deletes the proviso proposed by the Senate concerning Chapter 23 of title 11 of the District of Columbia Code relating to the Office of the Chief Medical Examiner. That proviso is replaced by section 148 under General Provisions .

PUBLIC EDUCATION SYSTEM

Appropriates $998,918,000 including $824,867,000 from local funds as proposed by the Senate instead of $995,418,000 including $821,367,000 from local funds as proposed by the House and deletes the proviso proposed by the Senate regarding the use of freed-up appropriations.

Public schools.—Allocates $769,943,000 including $629,309,000 from local funds for public schools as proposed by the Senate instead of $769,443,000 including $628,809,000 from local funds as proposed by the House. The increase above the House allowance includes $250,000 for a program to reduce school violence and $250,000 for a program to enhance the reading skills of public school students.

College tuition support.—Allocates $17,000,000 from Federal funds appropriated earlier in this Act as proposed by the Senate instead of $14,000,000 from Federal funds appropriated earlier in this Act as proposed by the House.

The conference agreement includes language as proposed by the House requiring that the quarterly payment of October 15, 2000 to the public charter schools be 50 percent of each public charter school's annual entitlement based on the unaudited October 5 enrollment count. The conference agreement includes language as proposed by the House requiring that the balance of unused allocations for public charter schools be available for public education in accordance with the School Reform Act of 1995. The conference agreement deletes language proposed by the House that would have required the Mayor to convene a task force concerning the School Reform Act of 1995 for the purpose of instituting a funding mechanism for the projected growth of charter schools.

Excel Institute Adult Education Program.—Inserts language as proposed by the House that allows funds allocated to the Institute to be used for construction and to acquire services from the General Services Administration on a reimbursable basis.

Evaluation process.—Inserts language concerning the evaluation process for public school employees as a proviso as proposed by the Senate instead of as a general provision (section 145 of House bill) as proposed by the House.

Fiscal year change.—Inserts language that provides advance appropriations on July 1, 2001 to public charter schools and to regular public schools based on the District's proposed budget for fiscal year 2002 as submitted to Congress and requires that the advances be charged against the final amount enacted into law in the fiscal year 2002 District of Columbia Appropriations Act instead of language proposed by the House that would have changed the fiscal year. The language recommended by the conferees will facilitate the operation of the public charter schools and the regular public schools by aligning funding with the programmatic school year that begins July 1, 2001 and ends June 30, 2002.

HUMAN SUPPORT SERVICES

(INCLUDING TRANSFER OF FUNDS)

Appropriates $1,535,654,000 including $637,347,000 from local funds instead of $1,532,204,000 including $633,897,000 from local funds as proposed by the House and $1,532,704,000 including $634,397,000 from local funds as proposed by the Senate and changes the heading to reflect the inclusion of transfers in this paragraph. The conference agreement deletes the proviso proposed by the Senate regarding the use of freed-up appropriations.

The conference agreement allocates $2,150,000 for environmental assessment, site remediation and wetlands restoration of the 11 acres of real property under the jurisdiction of the District of Columbia and no more than $1,300,000 for infrastructure costs for an entrance to Anacostia Park as proposed by the Senate. The conference action also prohibits the use of any of these funds to purchase private property in the Poplar Point area as proposed by the Senate. The conferees note that in addition to the $3,450,000 provided under this heading, $4,615,000 in Federal funds appropriated for infrastructure needs in Public Law 105-277 (112 Stat. 2681-552,3) has also been allocated to the Poplar Point project.

Public benefit corporation.—The conference agreement includes a proviso that allows the District to transfer not more than $90,000,000 from local funds provided under other accounts in this Act for the purpose of restructuring the delivery of health services in the District instead of 15 percent of local funds in the appropriation as proposed by the Senate. The language requires that the restructuring be pursuant to a restructuring plan approved by the Mayor, the Council, the Financial Authority, and the Board of Directors of the Public Benefit Corporation that reduces personnel levels consistent with the reduction-in-force set forth in the August 25, 2000 resolution of the Board of Directors of the Corporation which requires reducing personnel by at least 500 full-time equivalent employees without replacement by contract personnel. The language also requires that no funds be expended until 10 calendar days after the restructuring plan has received final approval and a copy has been submitted by the Mayor to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations, the House Committee on Government Reform, and the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs. The language agreed to by the conferees also requires that the plan include a certification that it does not rely upon any current or future request for additional appropriation of Federal Funds. Conforming language is included under the heading "District of Columbia Health and Hospitals Public Benefit Corporation".

Deletes the proviso proposed by the Senate regarding the use of freed-up appropriations.

The modified language also provides that no funds are to be obligated or expended until the emergency reserve fund has been fully funded for fiscal year 2001 as proposed by the Senate. The House language provided for the replacement of funds expended and prohibited the obligation of the reserves until certain conditions were met.

The conferees agree that the Water and Sewer Authority is expressly authorized to expend funds between projects authorized in prior years' budgets within these seven projects provided the Committees on Appropriations of the House and the Senate are notified of the details in writing at least 30 days prior to the obligation of the funds.

The conferees agree that section 140(b) of the House bill and section 127(b) of the Senate bill (new section 129(b)) also applies to the Water and Sewer Authority and that the agency head of the Water and Sewer Authority may abolish positions and separate the employees encumbering those abolished positions in accordance with the modified reduction in force procedures and severance pay authorized in section 129(b). The conferees agree that while section 129(b) applies to the Water and Sewer Authority, it does not change the Authority's general exemption from coverage under the Comprehensive Merit Personnel Act of 1978 (D.C. Code, sec. 1-601.1 et seq.), or the Authority's independent legal status within the District government.

The conference action does not prohibit reimbursement to the Corporation for services provided to other District government agencies and grants that in prior years were not included in the amounts appropriated from other funds.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA RETIREMENT BOARD

The conference agreement retains the proviso that requires the Retirement Board to provide quarterly reports of the allocations of charges by fund and expenditures of all funds.

The conference agreement deletes section 102 of the House bill as proposed by the Senate concerning vouchers covering expenditures of appropriations being audited before payments.

The conference agreement deletes section 104 of the House bill as proposed by the Senate concerning allowances for privately owned automobiles and motorcycles used for the performance of official duties.

The conference agreement retains section 107 of the House bill (new section 104) requiring the Mayor to maintain an index of all employment personal services and consulting contracts with specific information on any severance clause.

The conference agreement retains section 108 of the House bill (new section 105) prohibiting any appropriation from remaining available for obligation beyond the current fiscal year unless expressly so provided.

The conference agreement deletes section 114 of the House bill as proposed by the Senate that would have prohibited the Mayor from borrowing any funds for capital projects unless the Council had approved the borrowing by resolution.

The conference agreement deletes section 115 of the House bill as proposed by the Senate that would have prohibited the Mayor from using moneys borrowed for capital projects for operating expenses.

The conference agreement modifies section 116 of the House bill and section 109 of the Senate bill (new section 111) concerning reprogramming guidelines. The modification allows inter-appropriation transfers of not-to-exceed 2 percent provided the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and the House are notified in writing 30 days in advance as proposed by the Senate.

The conference agreement deletes section 117 of the House bill as proposed by the Senate that would have prohibited the use of Federal funds to provide a personal cook, chauffeur, or other personal servants to any officer or employee of the District of Columbia government.

The conference agreement retains section 110 of the Senate bill (new section 112) stating that consistent with the provisions of 31 U.S.C. 1301(a), appropriations under this Act shall be applied only to the objects for which the appropriations were made except as otherwise provided by law.

The conference agreement deletes section 118 of the House bill as proposed by the Senate that would have prohibited the use of Federal funds to procure passenger automobiles as defined in the Automobile Fuel Efficiency Act of 1980 with an Environmental Protection Agency estimated miles per gallon average of less than 22 miles per gallon.

The conference agreement deletes section 119 of the Senate bill concerning the use of previously appropriated funds for accounting and financial management services as determined by the District of Columbia Financial Responsibility and Management Assistance Authority.

The conference agreement amends section 120 of the Senate bill (new section 122) increasing the amount that can be paid to attorneys representing special education students.

The conference agreement amends section 124 of the House bill and section 116 of the Senate bill (new section 118) to allow the District of Columbia Courts to accept gifts to carry out authorized functions or duties without prior approval by the Mayor.

The conference agreement deletes sections 126, 132, 133, and 134 of the House bill and incorporates those four sections into section 118 of the Senate bill (new section 121). These sections relate to reporting requirements for the District of Columbia Public Schools and the University of the District of Columbia.

The conference agreement retains section 127 of the House bill and section 141 of the Senate bill (new section 153) concerning the Federal Grant and Cooperative Agreements Act of 1977 as it relates to the District of Columbia.

The conference agreement retains section 118 of the Senate bill (new section 121) which incorporates sections 126, 132, 133, and 134 of the House bill concerning reporting requirements for the District of Columbia Public Schools and the University of the District of Columbia.

The conference agreement retains section 127(b) of the Senate bill instead of section 140(b) of the House bill (new section 129(b)) concerning the modification of reduction in force procedures. The Senate version makes the modifications permanent law.

The conference agreement deletes section 128 of the House bill as proposed by the Senate that would have established conditions for granting preference to public charter schools in the use of surplus school properties.

The conference agreement retains section 129 of the House bill (new section 120) concerning the modification of contracting requirements for public charter schools in the District.

The conference agreement deletes section 138 of the House bill as proposed by the Senate concerning the classification of employees of the District of Columbia public schools.

The conference agreement replaces section 140(b) of the House bill with section 127(b) of the Senate bill (new section 129(b)) relating to the modification of reduction in force procedures. The Senate version makes the modifications permanent law.

The conference agreement retains section 140(c) of the House bill (new subsection 129(c)) that requires a prior analysis with certain exceptions for the procurement of goods and services in excess of $2,500.

The conference agreement deletes Section 144 of the House bill as proposed by the Senate concerning reorganization plans.

The conference agreement deletes section 145 of the House bill as proposed by the Senate relating to the evaluation process for District of Columbia Public School employees. This section has been included as a proviso under the Public Education System appropriation heading.

The conference agreement retains section 132 of the Senate bill (new section 136) which requires the Chief Financial Officer to submit a revised appropriated funds operating budget no later than November 1, 2000 or within 30 calendar days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

The conference agreement retains Section 147 of the House bill (new section 134) concerning the transfer or confinement of inmates classified above the medium security level to the Northeast Ohio Correctional Center located in Youngstown, Ohio.

The conference agreement deletes section 148 of the House bill as proposed by the Senate concerning the District's reserve fund.

The conference agreement retains section 149 of the House bill (new section 135) relating to the audit of the District of Columbia Highway Trust Fund by the Inspector General of the District of Columbia.

The conference agreement retains section 133(b) of the Senate bill (new section 137(b)) that requires a separate accounting by individuals or entities who receive any funds in this Act and carry out a needle exchange program for the hypodermic injection of any illegal drug.

The conference agreement amends section 153 of the House bill and section 136 of the Senate bill (new section 140) concerning certifications by chief financial officers that they understand the duties, including reporting requirements, and restrictions applicable to them and their agency as a result of this Act. The language requires the certification within 60 days as proposed by the Senate instead of within 30 days as proposed by the House and deletes the civil money penalty for violations as proposed by the Senate.

The conference agreement replaces section 154 of the House bill with section 144 of the Senate bill (new section 156) relating to overtime compensation for District government employees for time worked in excess of 40 hours per week.

The conference agreement retains section 158 of the House bill (new section 144) which authorizes the Mayor to allocate the District's limitation amount of qualified zone academy bonds among qualified zone academies within the District.

The conference agreement retains section 159 of the House bill (new section 145) which amends Section 11232 of the Balanced Budget Act of 1997 concerning Federal benefits for employees of the Corrections Trustee, Adult Probation, Office of Parole, and Pretrial Services Agency.

The conference agreement deletes section 160 of the House bill as proposed by the Senate that expressed the sense of the Congress that patients of St. Elizabeths Hospital and taxpayers of the District of Columbia are being poorly served by the current facilities and management of the Hospital. Language under Governmental Direction and Support requires the Chief Financial Officer to submit a study to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations on the merits and potential savings of privatizing the operation and administration of the Hospital.

The conference agreement retains section 161 of the House bill (new section 146) expressing the sense of the Congress that the District of Columbia Financial Responsibility and Management Assistance Authority should quickly complete the sale of the Franklin School property.

The conference agreement deletes section 162 of the House bill as proposed by the Senate that related to the fiduciary duty of District officials. The conferees are concerned that many District officials are treating incidences of mismanagement in their operations and finances as the norm. This attitude is unacceptable. Although the conferees are deleting section 162 from the bill, the conferees continue to be concerned and urge officials of the District of Columbia government (including officials of the District of Columbia Financial Responsibility and Management Assistance Authority, independent agencies, boards, commissions, and corporations of the government) to take all steps necessary to maintain a fiduciary duty to the taxpayers of the District in the administration of funds under their control.

The conference agreement modifies and transfers section 163 of the House bill to the appropriation "District of Columbia Health and Hospitals Public Benefit Corporation" as a proviso that requires a restructuring plan for D.C. General Hospital to be approved by District officials prior to increasing the appropriation through reprogrammings, transfers, loans or other mechanisms.

The conference agreement modifies and transfers the three subsections of section 164 of the House bill to the appropriation "District of Columbia Health and Hospitals Public Benefit Corporation" as provisos that (1) require a certification by the Chief Financial Officer, (2) clarify what may be covered by an affidavit, and (3) make certain actions unlawful regarding the signing of any affidavit.

The conference agreement deletes section 165 of the House bill as proposed by the Senate that would have prohibited the District of Columbia Health and Hospital Public Benefit Corporation from obligating or expending any amounts during fiscal year 2001 unless the Corporation certified that the obligation or expenditure was within the budget authority provided to the Corporation in this Act.

The conference agreement retains section 167 of the House bill (new section 147) that provides that nothing in this Act may be construed to prevent the Council or Mayor of the District of Columbia from addressing the issue of contraceptive coverage by health insurance plans, but expressing the intent of Congress that any legislation enacted should include a "conscience clause" which provides exceptions for religious beliefs and moral convictions.

The conference agreement retains section 168 of the House bill (new section 148) which repeals chapter 23 of title 11, of the D. C. Code and provides that this section shall take effect on the date on which legislation enacted by the Council of the District of Columbia to establish the Office of the Chief Medical Examiner in the executive branch of the government of the District of Columbia takes effect.

The conference agreement retains section 169 of the House bill (new section 149) concerning the prompt payment of appointed counsel.

The conference agreement revises section 170 of the House bill (new section 150) concerning the distribution of any needle or syringe for the hypodermic injection of any illegal drug in any area of the District of Columbia which is within 1000 feet of a public or private elementary or secondary school (including a public charter school) other than the locations cited in this Act and requires monthly reports on activity involving illegal drugs at or near any public housing site where a needle exchange program is conducted. The language also requires the Public Housing Police to submit monthly reports on illegal drug activity at or near any public housing site where a needle exchange program is conducted to the Executive Director of the D.C. Housing Authority and to the Committees on Appropriations of the House and the Senate. The monthly reports are to be submitted by the 15th calendar day of the following month. The conference agreement requires the Executive Director to ascertain any concerns of the residents of the public housing site about the needle exchange programs on or near their sites and requires the District government to take appropriate action to require relocation of the program if recommended by the housing police or by a significant number of residents of the site.

The conference agreement modifies section 171 of the House bill (new section 151) by appropriating $100,000 to the Metropolitan Police Department on the condition that the District government enacts into law a ban on the possession of tobacco products by minors as specified in this section. The funds are to be used by the Department to enforce the ban.

The conference agreement retains section 166 of the House bill and section 140 of the Senate bill (new section 152) that allows the D.C. Corporation Counsel to review and comment on briefs in private lawsuits and to consult with officials of the District government regarding such lawsuits.

The conference agreement retains section 142 of the Senate bill (new section 154) which amends section 450 of the Home Rule Act concerning a "Comprehensive Financial Management Policy" for the District of Columbia.

The conference agreement retains section 143 of the Senate bill (new section 155) which amends section 424(b) of the Home Rule Act concerning the appointment and duties of the Chief Financial Officer.

The conference agreement retains section 144 of the Senate bill and section 154 of the House bill (new section 156) concerning overtime work for employees of the District of Columbia government.

The conference agreement retains section 145 of the Senate bill (new section 157) which allows the Court Services and Offender Supervision Agency for the District of Columbia to continue to operate its ongoing drug-free workplace testing program during the period that its plan is being reviewed for approval by the Department of Health and Human Services.

The conference agreement retains section 146 of the Senate bill (new section 158) which requires the Mayor to continue to submit quarterly reports on crime; access to drug abuse treatment, management of parolees and pre-trial violent offenders; education, including access to special education services and student achievement; improvements in basic District services; the application for and management of Federal grants; and indicators of child well-being.

The conference agreement retains section 147 of the Senate bill (new section 159) establishing reserve funds (emergency reserve fund and contingency reserve fund). The conference agreement includes the Senate bill's provision establishing both an emergency and contingency reserve fund in the District's budget. The provision requires the emergency reserve to be established first, through a deposit each year of one percent of the District's local funds for four years. The conferees believe that a four percent emergency reserve fund, that can only be tapped in extraordinary circumstances and that is maintained in a separate account, will increase the fiscal stability of the city and indicate to the financial markets that the District has a healthy financial cushion that is walled off from the rest of the general budget. The conferees believe that holding these reserves can and will eventually reduce the borrowing costs of the District.

The conference agreement inserts a new section 160 that authorizes the District government to delegate its bonding authority to the District of Columbia Tobacco Settlement Financing Corporation. The Corporation will use the proceeds from the bond sale to repay outstanding debt, with expected savings to the District of $61,400,000 in debt service for fiscal year 2001. These savings are included in the District's budget for fiscal year 2001. The conferees believe that the proceeds of the tobacco securitization will be used solely to reduce the District's debt or to fund the emergency reserve fund. The conferees also expect that an amount equal to 50 percent of the interest savings secured by the tobacco securitization proceeds will be transferred to the emergency reserve fund established in this Act.

The conference agreement inserts a new section 161 that revises section 603(e)(2)(B) of the Student Loan Marketing Association Reorganization Act of 1996 to require that half of the public charter school credit enhancement fund created by that legislation be granted expeditiously by the Mayor to one or more qualified non-profit corporations to demonstrate innovative methods of providing credit enhancement assistance to public charter schools. The remaining half of the funds are to be administered by a five-person committee that may either provide those funds directly to charter schools or provide them to non-profit entities to promote innovative credit enhancement initiatives. Activities by recipient entities to enhance the availability of loans to charter schools may include, but are not limited to, guaranteeing, insuring or providing security (including by pledging collateral or taking title to real property) for loans; providing down payment assistance, subsidizing installment payments or otherwise directly facilitating loans; facilitating a secondary market for loans; and helping to identify potential lending sources, encouraging private lending and other similar activities to promote lending to charter schools. Activities by recipient entities to enhance the availability of bond financing for charter schools may include, but are not limited to, providing technical and other administrative assistance; and providing financial or other assistance necessary to improve the rating or proposed repayment terms of a bond issue, to induce the participation of underwriters, or to otherwise enhance the commercial feasibility of a proposed transaction (including by providing for all or a portion of installment payments on the bond in the event of borrower default or, in the case of a bond issue with a floating rate, a marked increase in the applicable rate, the pledging of reserves or other collateral, or by taking title to property or other interests). The conferees request that quarterly reports be submitted by the 15th calendar day of the month following the end of each quarter to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations, the House Committee on Government Reform, and the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs. Each report is to include, but not be limited to, the amount expended by payee for the quarter and cumulative, the services received for those funds, the amount of loans generated (gross and net) showing specific bond counsel and all other fees itemized with the names of those receiving the funds, the names of the lenders, the names of the charter schools receiving the proceeds, a description of the purpose for which each charter school will use the proceeds and a detailed status report with cost information on the progress each charter school is making to accomplish the purpose for which it received the proceeds. These reports are to continue until the purpose for which the proceeds were obtained has been accomplished.

The conference agreement inserts a new section 162 which gives the Mayor the exclusive authority to approve and execute leases of the Washington Marina and the Washington municipal fish wharf with the existing lessees for an initial term of 30 years, together with such other terms and conditions, including renewal options, as the Mayor deems appropriate.

The conference agreement inserts a new section 163 which transfers two sites, designated for educational use, to Fairfax County, Virginia immediately upon completion of the necessary remediation by the General Services Administration.

The conference agreement inserts a new section 164 that waives restrictions and allows the District's Inspector General to enter into a contract for the independent audit of the District's financial statements with an auditor who was a subcontractor to the independent auditor who audited the District's financial statements for the preceding fiscal year.

The conference agreement inserts a new section 165 that provides an alternative mechanism to exchange property as envisioned in the Lorton Technical Corrections Act of 1998. Under the 1998 legislation, the Interior Department was authorized to hold a portion of the 3,000 acre surplus Federal property in Lorton, Virginia and exchange it for Meadowood Farm on Mason Neck, Virginia. The Interior Department, however, encountered difficulties dealing directly with the owners of the Meadowood property. Fairfax County has volunteered to serve as an intermediary acquiring Meadowood in exchange for the Lorton parcel held by the Interior Department. Fairfax County believes it can deal more effectively with the owners of Meadowood. In return, the county believes that if it acquires the Interior Department's holding at Lorton it can make the necessary site improvements to generate a higher sales price. The language provides assurances that Fairfax County will be reimbursed for all costs involved in the acquisition of both the Meadowood property and the Lorton property. Any excess profits from the sale of the Lorton property would be returned to the General Services Administration. Any losses incurred by Fairfax County would be borne by the county alone.

The conference agreement inserts a new section 166 amending section 158(b) of the District of Columbia Appropriations Act, 2000 (Public Law 106-113, approved November 29, 1999; 113 Stat. 1527) to direct the Federal Highway Administration to conduct and perform the 14th Street bridge work identified in section 158. SEC. 635. (a) This section may be cited as "Amy Boyer's Law".

(b) Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The inappropriate display, sale, or use of social security numbers is a significant factor in a growing range of illegal activities, including fraud, identity theft, and, in some cases, stalking and other violent crimes.

(2) Because social security numbers are used to track financial, health care, and other sensitive information about individuals, the inappropriate sale or display of those numbers to the general public can result in serious invasions of individual privacy and facilitate the commission of criminal activity.

(3) The Federal Government requires virtually every individual in the United States to obtain and maintain a social security number in order to pay taxes, to qualify for social security benefits, or to seek employment. An unintended consequence of these requirements is that social security numbers have become tools that can be used to facilitate crime, fraud, and invasions of the privacy of the individuals to whom the numbers are assigned. Because the Federal Government created and maintains the social security number system, and because the Federal Government does not permit persons to exempt themselves from the requirements of that system, it is appropriate for the Federal Government to take steps to stem abuse of the system.

(4) A social security number is simply a sequence of numbers. In no meaningful sense can the number itself impart knowledge or ideas. Persons do not sell or transfer such numbers in order to convey any particularized message, nor to express to the purchaser any ideas, knowledge, or thoughts.

(5) No one should seek to profit from the display or sale to the general public of social security numbers in circumstances that create a substantial risk of physical, emotional, or financial harm to the individuals to whom those numbers are assigned.

(6) Various entities may display, sell, or use social security numbers, including the private sector, the Federal Government and State governments, and Federal and State courts. Whatever the source, the inappropriate display or sale to the general public of social security numbers should be prevented.

(7) Congress should enact legislation that will offer an individual assigned a social security number necessary protection from the display, sale, or purchase of the number in circumstances that might facilitate unlawful conduct or that might otherwise likely result in unfair and deceptive practices.

(c)(1) Part A of title XI of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1301 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"PROHIBITION OF CERTAIN MISUSES OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY NUMBER

"(2) Any willful violation committed contemporaneously with respect to the social security numbers of 2 or more individuals by means of mail, telecommunication, or otherwise shall be treated as a separate violation with respect to each such individual.

"(3) The provisions of section 1128A (other than subsections (a), (b), (f), (h), (i), (j), and (m), and the first sentence of subsection (c)) and the provisions of subsections (d) and (e) of section 205 shall apply to civil money penalties under this subsection in the same manner as such provisions apply to a penalty or proceeding under section 1128A(a), except that, for purposes of this paragraph, any reference in section 1128A to the Secretary shall be deemed a reference to the Commissioner of Social Security.

"(g) In this section, the term 'display or sell to the general public' means the intentional placing of an individual's social security number, or identifying portion thereof, in a viewable manner on a web site that makes such information available to the general public, or otherwise intentionally communicating an individual's social security number, or an identifying portion thereof, to the general public.

"(h) Nothing in this section shall be construed to limit the use of social security numbers by the Federal Government for governmental purposes, including any of the following purposes:

"(7) The term 'Producing Coastal State' means a Coastal State with a coastal seaward boundary within 200 miles from the geographic center of a leased tract other than a leased tract within any area of the Outer Continental Shelf where a moratorium on new leasing was in effect as of January 1, 2000, unless the lease was issued prior to the establishment of the moratorium and was in production on January 1, 2000.

Such term does not include any revenues from a leased tract or portion of a leased tract that is included within any area of the Outer Continental Shelf where a moratorium on new leasing was in effect as of January 1, 2000, unless the lease was issued prior to the establishment of the moratorium and was in production on January 1, 2000.

"(9) The term 'Secretary' means the Secretary of Commerce.

"(b) AUTHORIZATION.—For fiscal year 2001, $150,000,000 is authorized to be appropriated for the purposes of this section.

"(c) IMPACT ASSISTANCE PAYMENTS TO STATES AND POLITICAL SUBDIVISIONS.—The Secretary shall make payments from the amounts available under this section to Producing Coastal States with an approved Coastal Impact Assistance Plan, and to coastal political subdivisions as follows:

"(2) CALCULATION.—The amount for each Producing Coastal State under paragraph (1)(B) shall be calculated based on the ratio of qualified OCS revenues generated off the coastline of the Producing Coastal State to the qualified OCS revenues generated off the coastlines of all Producing Coastal States for the period beginning on January 1, 1995 and ending on December 31, 2000. Where there is more than one Producing Coastal State within 200 miles of a leased tract, the amount of each Producing Coastal State's payment under paragraph (1)(B) for such leased tract shall be inversely proportional to the distance between the nearest point on the coastline of such State and the geographic center of each leased tract or portion of the leased tract (to the nearest whole mile) that is within 200 miles of that coastline, as determined by the Secretary. A leased tract or portion of a leased tract shall be excluded if the tract or portion is located in a geographic area where a moratorium on new leasing was in effect on January 1, 2000, unless the lease was issued prior to the establishment of the moratorium and was in production on January 1, 2000.

"(A) 25 percent shall be allocated based on the ratio of such coastal political subdivision's coastal population to the coastal population of all coastal political subdivisions in the Producing Coastal State.

"(B) 25 percent shall be allocated based on the ratio of such coastal political subdivision's coastline miles to the coastline miles of all coastal political subdivisions in the Producing Coastal State.

"(C) 50 percent shall be allocated based on the relative distance of such coastal political subdivision from any leased tract used to calculate that Producing Coastal State's allocation using ratios that are inversely proportional to the distance between the point in the coastal political subdivision closest to the geographic center of each leased tract or portion, as determined by the Secretary. For purposes of the calculations under this subparagraph, a leased tract or portion of a leased tract shall be excluded if the leased tract or portion is located in a geographic area where a moratorium on new leasing was in effect on January 1, 2000, unless the lease was issued prior to the establishment of the moratorium and was in production on January 1, 2000.

"(4) FAILURE TO HAVE PLAN APPROVED.—Any amount allocated to a Producing Coastal State or coastal political subdivision but not disbursed because of a failure to have an approved Coastal Impact Assistance Plan under this section shall be allocated equally by the Secretary among all other Producing Coastal States in a manner consistent with this subsection except that the Secretary shall hold in escrow such amount until the final resolution of any appeal regarding the disapproval of a plan submitted under this section. The Secretary may waive the provisions of this paragraph and hold a Producing Coastal State's allocable share in escrow if the Secretary determines that such State is making a good faith effort to develop and submit, or update, a Coastal Impact Assistance Plan.

"(D) Certification by the Governor that ample opportunity has been accorded for public participation in the development and revision of the plan.

"(E) Measures for taking into account other relevant Federal resources and programs.

"(3) PROCEDURE.—The Secretary shall approve or disapprove each plan or amendment within 90 days of its submission.

"(4) AMENDMENT.—Any amendment to the plan shall be prepared in accordance with the requirements of this subsection and shall be submitted to the Secretary for approval or disapproval.

(II) is provided by a nonprofit corporation, including the National Rural Utilities Cooperative Finance Corporation, engaged primarily in commercial lending, if the Board determines that such nonprofit corporation has one or more issues of outstanding long-term debt that is rated within the highest 3 rating categories of a nationally recognized statistical rating organization;

(ii) if the loan is provided by a lender described in clause (i)(II) and the Board determines that the making of the loan by such lender will cause a decline in such lender's debt rating as described in that clause, the Board at its discretion may disapprove the loan guarantee on this basis;

(iii) no loan may be made for purposes of this Act by a governmental entity or affiliate thereof, or by the Federal Agricultural Mortgage Corporation, or any institution supervised by the Office of Federal Housing Enterprise Oversight, the Federal Housing Finance Board, or any affiliate of such entities;

(i) 25 years from the date of the execution of the loan; or

(ii) the economically useful life, as determined by the Board or in consultation with persons or entities deemed appropriate by the Board, of the primary assets to be used in the delivery of the signals concerned; and

(F) the loan meets any additional criteria developed under subsection (g).

(3) Protection of United States Financial Interests.—The Board may not approve the guarantee of a loan under this Act unless—

(B) the Board makes a determination in writing that—

(i) to the best of its knowledge upon due inquiry, the assets, facilities, or equipment covered by the loan will be utilized economically and efficiently;

(ii) the terms, conditions, security, and schedule and amount of repayments of principal and the payment of interest with respect to the loan protect the financial interests of the United States and are reasonable;

(iii) the value of collateral provided by an applicant is at least equal to the unpaid balance of the loan amount covered by the loan guarantee (the "Amount" for purposes of this clause); and if the value of collateral provided by an applicant is less than the Amount, the additional required collateral is provided by any affiliate of the applicant;

(iv) all necessary and required regulatory and other approvals, spectrum licenses, and delivery permissions have been received for the loan and the project under the loan;

(v) the loan would not be available on reasonable terms and conditions without a loan guarantee under this Act; and

(vi) repayment of the loan can reasonably be expected.

(e) Considerations.—

(1) Type of Market.—

(A) Priority Considerations.—To the maximum extent practicable, the Board shall give priority in the approval of loan guarantees under this Act in the following order:

(i) First, to projects that will serve households in nonserved areas. In considering such projects, the Board shall balance projects that will serve the largest number of households with projects that will serve remote, isolated communities (including noncontiguous States) in areas that are unlikely to be served through market mechanisms.

(ii) Second, to projects that will serve households in underserved areas. In considering such projects, the Board shall balance projects that will serve the largest number of households with projects that will serve remote, isolated communities (including noncontiguous States) in areas that are unlikely to be served through market mechanisms.

Within each category, the Board shall consider the project's estimated cost per household and shall give priority to those projects that provide the highest quality service at the lowest cost per household.

(B) Additional Consideration.—The Board should give additional consideration to projects that also provide high-speed Internet service.

(C) Prohibitions.—The Board may not approve a loan guarantee under this Act for a project that—

(i) is designed primarily to serve 1 or more of the top 40 designated market areas (as that term is defined in section 122(j) of title 17, United States Code); or

(ii) would alter or remove National Weather Service warnings from local broadcast signals.

(2) Other Considerations.—The Board shall consider other factors, which shall include projects that would—

(A) offer a separate tier of local broadcast signals, but for applicable Federal, State, or local laws or regulations;

(B) provide lower projected costs to consumers of such separate tier; and

(C) enable the delivery of local broadcast signals consistent with the purpose of this Act by a means reasonably compatible with existing systems or devices predominantly in use.

(3) Further Consideration.—In implementing this Act, the Board shall support the use of loan guarantees for projects that would serve households not likely to be served in the absence of loan guarantees under this Act.

(f) Guarantee Limits.—

(1) Limitation on Aggregate Value of Loans.—The aggregate value of all loans for which loan guarantees are issued under this Act (including the unguaranteed portion of such loans) may not exceed $1,250,000,000.

(2) GUARANTEE LEVEL.—A loan guarantee issued under this Act may not exceed an amount equal to 80 percent of a loan meeting in its entirety the requirements of subsection (d)(2)(A). If only a portion of a loan meets the requirements of that subsection, the Board shall determine that percentage of the loan meeting such requirements (the "applicable portion") and may issue a loan guarantee in an amount not exceeding 80 percent of the applicable portion.

(g) UNDERWRITING CRITERIA.—Within the period provided for under subsection (b)(1), the Board shall, in consultation with the Director of the Office of Management and Budget and an independent public accounting firm, develop underwriting criteria relating to the guarantee of loans that are consistent with the purpose of this Act, including appropriate collateral and cash flow levels for loans guaranteed under this Act, and such other matters as the Board considers appropriate.

(h) CREDIT RISK PREMIUMS.—

(1) ESTABLISHMENT AND ACCEPTANCE.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Board may establish and approve the acceptance of credit risk premiums with respect to a loan guarantee under this Act in order to cover the cost, as defined in section 502(5) of the Federal Credit Reform Act of 1990, of the loan guarantee. To the extent that appropriations of budget authority are insufficient to cover the cost, as so determined, of a loan guarantee under this Act, credit risk premiums shall be accepted from a non-Federal source under this subsection on behalf of the applicant for the loan guarantee.

(B) AUTHORITY LIMITED BY APPROPRIATIONS ACTS.—Credit risk premiums under this subsection shall be imposed only to the extent provided for in advance in appropriations Acts.

(2) CREDIT RISK PREMIUM AMOUNT.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Board shall determine the amount of any credit risk premium to be accepted with respect to a loan guarantee under this Act on the basis of—

(i) the financial and economic circumstances of the applicant for the loan guarantee, including the amount of collateral offered;

(ii) the proposed schedule of loan disbursements;

(iii) the business plans of the applicant for providing service;

(iv) any financial commitment from a broadcast signal provider; and

(v) the concurrence of the Director of the Office of Management and Budget as to the amount of the credit risk premium.

(B) PROPORTIONALITY.—To the extent that appropriations of budget authority are sufficient to cover the cost, as determined under section 502(5) of the Federal Credit Reform Act of 1990, of loan guarantees under this Act, the credit risk premium with respect to each loan guarantee shall be reduced proportionately.

(C) PAYMENT OF PREMIUMS.—Credit risk premiums under this subsection shall be paid to an account (the "Escrow Account") established in the Treasury which shall accrue interest and such interest shall be retained by the account, subject to subparagraph (D).

(D) DEDUCTIONS FROM ESCROW ACCOUNT.—If a default occurs with respect to any loan guaranteed under this Act and the default is not cured in accordance with the terms of the underlying loan or loan guarantee agreement, the Administrator, in accordance with subsections (i) and (j) of section 5, shall liquidate, or shall cause to be liquidated, all assets collateralizing such loan as to which it has a lien or security interest. Any shortfall between the proceeds of the liquidation net of costs and expenses relating to the liquidation, and the guarantee amount paid pursuant to this Act shall be deducted from funds in the Escrow Account and credited to the Administrator for payment of such shortfall. At such time as determined under subsection (d)(2)(E) of this section when all loans guaranteed under this Act have been repaid or otherwise satisfied in accordance with this Act and the regulations promulgated hereunder, remaining funds in the Escrow Account, if any, shall be refunded, on a pro rata basis, to applicants whose loans guaranteed under this Act were not in default, or where any default was cured in accordance with the terms of the underlying loan or loan guarantee agreement.

(i) LIMITATIONS ON GUARANTEES FOR CERTAIN CABLE OPERATORS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, no loan guarantee under this Act may be granted or used to provide funds for a project that extends, upgrades, or enhances the services provided over any cable system to an area that, as of the date of the enactment of this Act, is covered by a cable franchise agreement that expressly obligates a cable system operator to serve such area.

(j) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—The decision of the Board to approve or disapprove the making of a loan guarantee under this Act shall not be subject to judicial review.

(k) APPLICABILITY OF APA.—Except as otherwise provided in subsection (j), the provisions of subchapter II of chapter 5 and chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code (commonly referred to as the Administrative Procedure Act), shall apply to actions taken under this Act.

(4) PERFECTED SECURITY INTEREST.—With respect to a loan guaranteed under this Act, the Administrator and the lender shall have a perfected security interest in assets securing the loan that are fully sufficient to protect the financial interests of the United States and the lender.

(d) EXPIRATION OF LOAN GUARANTEE UPON STRIPPING.—Notwithstanding subsections (c), (e), and (h), a loan guarantee under this Act shall have no force or effect if any part of the guaranteed portion of the loan is transferred separate and apart from the unguaranteed portion of the loan.

(e) ADJUSTMENT.—The Board may approve the adjustment of any term or condition of a loan guarantee or a loan guaranteed under this Act, including the rate of interest, time of payment of principal or interest, or security requirements only if—

(1) the adjustment is consistent with the financial interests of the United States;

(2) consent has been obtained from the parties to the loan agreement;

(3) the adjustment is consistent with the underwriting criteria developed under section 4(g);

(4) the adjustment does not adversely affect the interest of the Federal Government in the assets or collateral of the applicant;

(5) the adjustment does not adversely affect the ability of the applicant to repay the loan; and

(6) the National Telecommunications and Information Administration has been consulted by the Board regarding the adjustment.

(f) PERFORMANCE SCHEDULES.—

(1) PERFORMANCE SCHEDULES.—An applicant for a loan guarantee under this Act for a project covered by section 4(e)(1) shall enter into stipulated performance schedules with the Administrator with respect to the signals to be provided through the project.

(2) PENALTY.—The Administrator may assess against and collect from an applicant described in paragraph (1) a penalty not to exceed 3 times the interest due on the guaranteed loan of the applicant under this Act if the applicant fails to meet its stipulated performance schedule under that paragraph.

(g) COMPLIANCE.—The Administrator, in cooperation with the Board and as the regulations of the Board may provide, shall enforce compliance by an applicant, and any other party to a loan guarantee for whose benefit assistance under this Act is intended, with the provisions of this Act, any regulations under this Act, and the terms and conditions of the loan guarantee, including through the submittal of such reports and documents as the Board may require in regulations prescribed by the Board and through regular periodic inspections and audits.

(h) COMMERCIAL VALIDITY.—A loan guarantee under this Act shall be incontestable—

(1) in the hands of an applicant on whose behalf the loan guarantee is made, unless the applicant engaged in fraud or misrepresentation in securing the loan guarantee; and

(2) as to any person or entity (or their respective successor in interest) who makes or contracts to make a loan to the applicant for the loan guarantee in reliance thereon, unless such person or entity (or respective successor in interest) engaged in fraud or misrepresentation in making or contracting to make such loan.

(2) FULLY SATISFYING OBLIGATIONS OWED THE UNITED STATES.—The Administrator may accept property in satisfaction of any sums owed the United States as a result of a default on a loan guaranteed under this Act, but only to the extent that any cash accepted by the Administrator is not sufficient to satisfy fully the sums owed as a result of the default.

(l) BREACH OF CONDITIONS.—The Administrator shall commence a civil action in a court of appropriate jurisdiction to enjoin any activity which the Board finds is in violation of this Act, the regulations under this Act, or any conditions which were duly agreed to, and to secure any other appropriate relief, including relief against any affiliate of the applicant.

(m) ATTACHMENT.—No attachment or execution may be issued against the Administrator or any property in the control of the Administrator pursuant to this Act before the entry of a final judgment (as to which all rights of appeal have expired) by a Federal, State, or other court of competent jurisdiction against the Administrator in a proceeding for such action.

(A) the alien may not be deported or removed from the United States;

(B) the Attorney General shall, in accordance with regulations, permit the alien to return to the United States after such brief and casual trips abroad as reflect an intention on the part of the alien to adjust to lawful permanent resident status and after brief temporary trips abroad occasioned by a family obligation involving an occurrence such as the illness or death of a close relative or other family need; and

(C) the Attorney General shall grant the alien authorization to engage in employment in the United States and provide to that alien an "employment authorized" endorsement or other appropriate work permit.

(7) TEMPORARY STAY OF REMOVAL AND WORK AUTHORIZATION FOR CERTAIN APPLICANTS BEFORE APPLICATION PERIOD.—In lieu of subsection (e)(1) of such section 245A, the Attorney General shall provide that in the case of an eligible alien described in subsection (b) of this section who is apprehended before the beginning of the application period described in paragraph (2)(A) and who can establish a prima facie case of eligibility to have his status adjusted under such section 245A pursuant to this section (but for the fact that he may not apply for such adjustment until the beginning of such period), until the alien has had the opportunity during the first 30 days of the application period to complete the filing of an application for adjustment, the alien—

(A) may not be deported or removed from the United States; and

(B) shall be granted authorization to engage in employment in the United States and be provided an "employment authorized" endorsement or other appropriate work permit.

The conferees on H.R. 4942 agree with the matter included in H.R. 5548 and enacted in this conference report by reference and the following description of it. The bill was developed through negotiations by subcommittee members of the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Subcommittees of the House and Senate on the differences in the House passed and Senate reported versions of H.R. 4690. References in the following description to the "conference agreement" mean the matter included in the introduced bill enacted by this conference report. References to the House bill mean the House passed version of H.R. 4690. References to the Senate reported amendment mean the Senate reported version of H.R. 4690.

The House passed H.R. 4690 on June 26, 2000. The Senate reported from Committee a Senate amendment to H.R. 4690 on July 21, 2000. References in the following statement to appropriations amounts or other items proposed by the House bill or the Senate-reported amendment refer only to those amounts and items recommended in the House-passed and Senate-reported versions of H.R. 4690. Any reference to appropriations amounts or other items included in the conference agreement reflects the final agreement on H.R. 4690. This statement reflects how the funds provided in the conference agreement are to be spent.

Senate-reported amendment: The Senate Appropriations Committee considered H.R. 4690 as passed by the House, struck all after the enacting clause, and inserted the text of the Senate-reported amendment. The conference agreement includes a revised bill.

TITLE I—DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

GENERAL ADMINISTRATION

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

The conference agreement includes $88,713,000 for General Administration, instead of $83,713,000 as proposed in the Senate-reported amendment and $84,177,000 as proposed in the House bill.

The conference agreement adopts by reference the House report language regarding budget "shortfalls" and racial disparities in Federal capital prosecutions.

The conference agreement includes a $5,000,000 transfer from the Immigration and Naturalization Service Salaries and Expenses account to continue the planned integration of the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) IDENT system and the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) IAFIS system.

The conference agreement includes a $5,000,000 increase for the Office of Intelligence Policy and Review for Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act applications.

The conference agreement includes bill language contained in the House bill specifying the amount of funding provided for the Department Leadership Program and the Offices of Legislative and Public Affairs.

JOINT AUTOMATED BOOKING SYSTEM

The conference agreement includes $15,915,000 for the Joint Automated Booking System (JABS) program as proposed in the Senate-reported amendment, instead of $1,800,000 as proposed in the House bill.

NARROWBAND COMMUNICATIONS

The conference agreement includes $205,000,000 for narrowband communications conversion activities as proposed in the Senate-reported amendment, instead of $95,445,000 as proposed in the House bill. The conference agreement provides funding necessary to continue implementation of the Department of Justice Wireless Network (JWN), and for operations and maintenance of legacy systems. The Wireless Management Office (WMO) is directed to submit quarterly status reports on implementation of the JWN, with the first such report due no later than February 15, 2001.

The conference agreement deletes a citation included in the House bill but not included in the Senate-reported amendment.

COUNTERTERRORISM FUND

The conference agreement includes $5,000,000 for the Counterterrorism Fund as proposed in the Senate-reported amendment, instead of $10,000,000 as proposed in the House bill. When combined with $32,844,150 in prior year carryover, a total of $37,844,150 will be available in the Fund in fiscal year 2001 to cover unanticipated, extraordinary expenses incurred as a result of a terrorist threat or incident.

The conference agreement retains language, included in the House bill and carried in previous Acts, authorizing the Attorney General to make expenditures from the fund, subject to section 605 of this Act. The Senate-reported amendment proposed to give this authority to a new Deputy Attorney General.

TELECOMMUNICATIONS CARRIER COMPLIANCE FUND

The conference agreement includes $201,420,000 for the Telecommunications Carrier Compliance program for implementation of the Communications Assistance for Law Enforcement Act of 1994 (CALEA), instead of $278,021,000 as proposed in the House bill. The Senate-reported amendment did not include funding for this activity. This amount, when combined with funds previously made available, will provide the full $500,000,000 authorized and required to implement CALEA.

The conference agreement concurs with the direction in the House report that the Department and the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) are to remain focused on the timely implementation of CALEA, and have therefore included $17,300,000 within the FBI Salaries and Expenses account for CALEA implementation. The Department of Justice is directed to submit a reorganization proposal no later than November 15, 2000, to ensure coordination of CALEA implementation and other related electronic surveillance issues.

ADMINISTRATIVE REVIEW AND APPEALS

The conference agreement includes $161,062,000 for Administrative Review and Appeals, instead of $159,570,000 as proposed in the House bill and $112,814,000 as proposed in the Senate-reported amendment. Of the total amount provided, $159,335,000 is for the Executive Office for Immigration Review (EOIR) and $1,727,000 is for the Office of the Pardon Attorney.

The conference agreement includes $9,566,000 for adjustments to base, and $3,000,000, 37 positions and 19 full-time equivalent workyears (FTE) to address the increased Immigration Judge and appellate caseload. In addition, EOIR is directed to provide such sums as necessary for point-to-point installation of video-conferencing equipment in accordance with EOIR's plan and the Senate report. The conference agreement also includes direction under the INS Examinations Fees account regarding continued support for contract court interpreter services.

DETENTION TRUSTEE

The conference agreement includes $1,000,000 to establish a new Federal Detention Trustee within the Department of Justice as proposed in the House bill. The Senate-reported amendment did not address this matter. The conference agreement reflects the concerns expressed in the House report regarding the planning and management of detention space in the Department of Justice. Therefore, the direction included in the House report regarding the authorities and duties of this new Trustee, and the establishment of regional pilot projects to test better mechanisms for addressing detention needs, is adopted by reference. Further, the Department of Justice is expected to consolidate all detention resources under the Trustee as part of the fiscal year 2002 budget submission.

OFFICE OF INSPECTOR GENERAL

The conference agreement includes $41,575,000 for the Office of Inspector General (OIG) instead of $41,825,000 as proposed in the House bill and $42,192,000 as proposed in the Senate-reported amendment. The conference agreement also assumes that $1,500,000 in INS fees will be available to the OIG.

The conference agreement directs the Department of Justice to review its procedures for releasing OIG investigatory material and findings and inform the Committees on Appropriations by June 1, 2001, if any procedures should be modified.

The OIG is directed to submit future budget requests separating OIG Leadership Offices and OIG Operational Offices. The OIG Leadership Offices decision unit should include the following: the Inspector General, the Deputy Inspector General, the Counselor to the Inspector General, the Special Counsel, and the Special Investigations and Review Unit. The Operational Offices decision unit should include the following offices: the Audit Division, the Investigations Division, the Inspections Division, and the Management and Planning Division.

The conference agreement directs that the OIG submit a detailed financial plan to the Committees on Appropriations by December 1, 2000.

United States Parole Commission

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

The conference agreement includes $8,855,000 for the U.S. Parole Commission, as proposed in the House bill, instead of the $7,380,000 as proposed in the Senate-reported amendment. The conference agreement adopts by reference the recommendation in the Senate report on detailing attorneys.

Legal Activities

SALARIES AND EXPENSES, GENERAL LEGAL ACTIVITIES

The conference agreement includes $535,771,000 for General Legal Activities, instead of $523,228,000 as proposed in the House bill, and $494,310,000 as proposed in the Senate-reported amendment.

The recommendation includes base adjustments for all divisions, but does not include an undefined base restoration. The distribution of funding provided is as follows:

Office of the Solicitor General	$7,118,000
Tax Division	70,991,000
Criminal Division	110,851,000
Civil Division	154,092,000
Environment and Natural Resources	68,703,000
Office of Legal Counsel	4,967,000
Civil Rights Division	92,166,000
Interpol—USNCB	7,686,000
Legal Activities Office Automation	18,877,000
Office of Dispute Resolution	320,000
Total	535,771,000

The conference agreement includes a $3,000,000 increase for the Civil Rights Division, including funding for civil enforcement for police misconduct, and other highest priority initiatives.

The conference agreement provides $18,877,000 to remain available until expended for office automation costs as proposed in the House bill, instead of $18,571,000 as proposed in the Senate-reported amendment. The conference agreement adopts language included in the Senate-reported amendment which limits the use of these funds to automation costs and allows such funds to be used for the United States Trustees Program. The conference agreement adopts by reference the Senate report language regarding the Office of Special Investigations, and the House report language regarding extradition reporting and extradition treaties.

THE NATIONAL CHILDHOOD VACCINE INJURY ACT

The conference agreement includes a reimbursement of $4,028,000 for fiscal year 2001 from the Vaccine Injury Compensation Trust Fund to the Department of Justice, as proposed in the House bill and the Senate-reported amendment.

SALARIES AND EXPENSES, ANTITRUST DIVISION

The conference agreement provides $120,838,000 for the Antitrust Division as proposed in the Senate-reported amendment, instead of $113,269,000 as proposed in the House bill. The conference agreement assumes that of the amount provided, $95,838,000 will be derived from current year fee collections and $25,000,000 from estimated unobligated fee collections available from prior years, resulting in a net direct appropriation of $0. The use of any remaining unobligated fees balances from prior years is subject to the reprogramming requirements outlined in section 605 of this Act.

Appropriations for both the Division and the Federal Trade Commission are financed with Hart-Scott-Rodino Act pre-merger filing fees. Section 630 of this Act modifies the Hart-Scott-Rodino Act to include a three-tiered fee structure that increases the filing threshold for a merger transaction from $15,000,000 to $50,000,000. It is anticipated that the increase in the filing threshold will reduce the number of mergers requiring review by approximately 50 percent.

SALARIES AND EXPENSES, UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS

The conference agreement includes $1,250,382,000 for the U.S. Attorneys, instead of $1,247,416,000 as proposed in the House bill, and $1,159,014,000 as proposed in the Senate-reported amendment. The following narrative reflects how the funds provided in the conference agreement are to be spent.

The conference agreement provides a net increase of $59,896,000 for pay and inflationary adjustments to enable the U.S. Attorneys to maintain the current operating level. The conference agreement does not include $7,425,000 requested as base adjustments to substitute direct appropriations for activities previously supported from the Health Care Fraud and Abuse Control (HCFAC) account. The Department of Justice is directed to continue to provide funding for not less than 177 positions and 177 FTE to the U.S. Attorneys from the HCFAC account to support health care fraud activities.

The conference agreement also includes the following program increases:

Firearms Prosecutions.—$15,259,000, 163 positions and 82 FTE, including 113 attorneys, to augment prosecutions under existing firearms statutes. This amount, when combined with base resources of $7,125,000, will provide a total of $22,384,000 for intensive firearms prosecution projects. The direction included in the House report regarding the criteria and process for allocation of these funds is adopted by reference. Further, the Executive Office of U.S. Attorneys is directed not to set aside any portion of these funds for headquarters priorities, but rather is to allocate these funds in accordance with the priorities identified by the local districts which will result in a direct increase in prosecutions under existing gun laws. In addition, the conference agreement adopts the Senate direction requiring the annualization of funds provided in fiscal year 2000 for firearms prosecutions, and the reporting requirement regarding panel attorney costs.

Cyber Crime and Intellectual Property.—$3,974,000, 50 positions and 25 FTE, including 28 attorneys, to augment the investigation and prosecution of computer and intellectual property crimes, including crimes identified in the No Electronic Theft (NET) Act, the National Information Infrastructure Assurance Act, and the Economic Espionage Act. The direction included in the Senate report regarding submission of a report on copyright enforcement is adopted by reference.

Immigration.—$1,974,000, 24 positions and 12 FTE, including 13 attorneys, to address the growing criminal immigration caseload along the Southwest Border, with particular emphasis to be placed on prosecutions of individuals involved in alien smuggling, document fraud, and illegal aliens with multiple deportations. The conference agreement adopts by reference the direction included in the House report regarding submission of a spending plan for these resources.

Indian Country.—$5,000,000, 60 positions and 30 FTE, including 33 attorneys, to enhance Federal investigation and prosecution activities in Indian Country to meet Federal statutory responsibilities related to Indian Country.

Legal Education.—$2,300,000 to continue establishment of a distance learning facility at the National Advocacy Center (NAC). This amount, when combined with $15,316,000 in base resources, provides a total of $17,616,000 under this account for legal education at the National Advocacy Center (NAC). These funds are to be spent in accordance with the direction included in the Senate report.

Within the total amount available to the U.S. Attorneys, the conference agreement includes $2,612,000 for technology demonstration projects, and adopts by reference the direction included in the Senate report regarding distribution of these resources. In addition, $1,000,000 is included from within base resources to continue a violent crime task force demonstration project, as proposed in the Senate-reported amendment. The conference agreement also adopts by reference the direction included in the House and Senate reports regarding the unstaffed offices report, as well as the direction included in the Senate report regarding an office in Western Kentucky. In addition, the Senate report language regarding property flipping, computer network privatization, and a fiscal year 1995 quarterly reporting requirement are adopted by reference.

The conference agreement does not adopt the recommendations included in the Senate report regarding the reallocation of existing staffing to the Southwest border and within the Missouri River Valley, spending freezes among object classifications, elimination of base funds for office relocations, limitations on expansion of gun prosecution initiatives, or pre-trial sentencing guidelines.

The conference agreement includes a provision under Title VI of this Act which prohibits the FBI from charging a fee for NICS checks, and instead provides funding to the FBI for its costs to operate the NICS.

FBI Technology Upgrade Plan.—The conference agreement includes total funding of $100,700,000, 14 positions and 7 FTE, for this initiative (previously referred to as the Information Sharing Initiative/e-FBI). These services are to be limited to victim assistance as described in the Victims of Crime Act and shall not cover non-victim witness activities such as witness protection or non-victim witness management services, paralegal duties or community outreach. The FBI is further directed to work with the Office of Victims of Crime (OVC) in developing position descriptions, grade level and hiring requirements, training and annual reporting requests for these specialists. The conference agreement assumes $7,400,000 will be needed to support 112 victim/witness specialists to be distributed as directed in the Senate report. The Committees on Appropriations expect to be notified of the final distribution of these specialists.

The conference agreement adopts by reference the direction included in the House report regarding continued participation in the HIDTA program, quarterly reports on source and transit countries, quarterly reports on implementation of the Caribbean initiative, and a report on requirements in the region. The conference agreement does not include funding under DEA for continuation of the demand reduction initiative recommended in the House report, but has instead transferred base funding for this program from DEA Domestic Enforcement to the Office of Justice Programs. DEA is also directed to better coordinate its operations with other Federal agencies, including INS and the FBI, along the Southwest Border, and to pursue co-location of offices whenever practical. The direction included in the Senate report regarding DEA's presence in Chile is adopted by reference. Within the amounts provided under this account, DEA may use up to $500,000 for a study on methods to eliminate the effectiveness of anhydrous ammonia in methamphetamine production, as authorized.

Drug Diversion Control Fee Account.—The conference agreement provides $83,543,000 for DEA's Drug Diversion Control Program for fiscal year 2001, as provided in the House bill and the Senate-reported amendment. This amount includes an increase of $3,213,000 for adjustments to base, including the annualization of 25 positions provided in fiscal year 2000 for customer service improvements and drug data analysis. The conference agreement assumes that the level of balances in the Fee Account are sufficient to fully support diversion control programs in fiscal year 2001. As was the case in fiscal years 1999 and 2000, no funds are provided in the DEA Salaries and Expenses appropriation for this account in fiscal year 2001.

The conference agreement includes bill language, modified from language proposed in the House bill, providing not to exceed 7,520 positions and 7,412 FTE for DEA from funds provided in this Act. The Senate-reported amendment did not include a similar provision.

CONSTRUCTION

The conference agreement includes no new funding for this account as proposed in the Senate-reported amendment, instead of $5,500,000 as proposed in the House bill. A total of $19,500,000 in prior year carryover balances is available to fund planned fiscal year 2001 expenditures.

IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION SERVICE

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

The conference agreement includes $3,125,876,000 for the salaries and expenses of the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS), instead of $3,121,213,000 as provided in the House bill, and $2,895,397,000 as provided in the Senate-reported amendment. In addition to the amounts appropriated, the conference agreement assumes that $1,549,480,000 will be available from offsetting fee collections instead of $1,438,812,000 as proposed by the House and $1,524,771,000 as proposed by the Senate. Thus, including resources provided under the Construction account, the conference agreement provides a total operating level of $4,808,658,000 for INS, instead of $4,670,689,000 as proposed by the House and $4,553,470,000 as proposed by the Senate, representing a $548,242,000 (13%) increase over fiscal year 2000. The following narrative reflects how funds provided in the conference agreement are to be spent.

INS Organization and Management.—The conference agreement incorporates concerns expressed in the House report that a lack of resources is no longer an acceptable response to INS's inability to adequately address its mission responsibilities. The conference agreement includes the establishment of clearer chains of command—one for enforcement activities and one for services to noncitizens—as one step towards making the INS a more efficient, accountable, and effective agency. Consistent with the concept of separating immigration enforcement from services, the conference agreement continues to provide for a separation of funds, as in the fiscal year 1999 and 2000 Appropriations Acts. The conference agreement separates funds into two accounts, as requested in the budget and proposed in the House bill: Enforcement and Border Affairs, and Citizenship and Benefits, Immigration Support and Program Direction. INS enforcement funds are provided in the Enforcement and Border Affairs account. All immigration-related benefits and naturalization, support and program resources are provided in the Citizenship and Benefits, Immigration Support and Program Direction account. Neither account includes revenues generated in various fee accounts to fund program activities for both enforcement and services functions, which are in addition to the appropriated funds and are discussed below. Funds for INS construction projects continue to be provided in the INS Construction account.

The conference agreement includes bill language which provides authority for the Attorney General to transfer funds from one account to another in order to ensure that funds are properly aligned. Such transfers may occur notwithstanding any transfer limitations imposed under this Act but such transfers are still subject to the reprogramming requirements under Section 605 of this Act. It is expected that any request for transfer of funds will remain within the activities under those headings.

The conference agreement includes $2,547,057,000 for Enforcement and Border Affairs, and $578,819,000 for Citizenship and Benefits, Immigration Support and Program Direction.

Base adjustments.—The conference agreement provides a total increase of $101,008,000 and 641 FTE for adjustments to base for INS salaries and expenses, offset by a $89,000,000 and 404 FTE transfer to the INS Exams Fees account for the naturalization and backlog reduction initiatives, as proposed in the budget request. The conference agreement does not include transfers to the Exams Fees account, the Breached/Bond Detention account, and the Justice Prisoner Alien Transportation System (JPATS) Fund, as proposed in the Senate-reported amendment.

For the Enforcement and Border Affairs account, the conference agreement provides an increase of $86,255,000 and 889 FTE for pay and inflationary adjustments for Border Patrol, Investigations, Detention and Deportation, and Intelligence. This represents the full amount requested less $11,770,000 for the annualization of border patrol agents not yet hired, and $3,343,000 for the portion of the fiscal year 2000 annualized pay raise which has already been paid in the current fiscal year. Funds have not been included for the proposed increase in the journeyman level for border patrol agents and immigration inspectors.

For the Citizenship and Benefits, Immigration Support and Program Direction account, the conference agreement includes an increase of $14,752,000 for pay and inflationary adjustments for the existing activities of Citizenship and Benefits, Immigration Support, and Management and Administration; offset by a transfer of $89,000,000 in naturalization and backlog reduction activities to the Exams Fees account, as proposed in the budget. The amount provided for base adjustments represents the full amount requested less $690,000 for the portion of the fiscal year 2000 annualized pay raise which has already been paid in the current fiscal year. In addition, $35,000,000 is continued within the base to support naturalization and other benefits processing backlog reduction activities.

None of these amounts include offsetting fees, which are used to fund both enforcement and services functions.

In addition, program increases totaling $222,768,000 are provided, as follows:

Border Control and Management.—$100,612,000 is provided for additional border patrol staffing, technology, land border inspections, and Joint Terrorism Task Forces, as follows:

$52,000,000, 430 positions and 215 FTE, are for new border patrol agents. It is noted that again in fiscal years 1999 and 2000, the INS has failed to hire the 1,000 new border patrol agents provided in each of those years. Should the INS be unable to recruit the required agents again in fiscal year 2001, the INS is to submit a reprogramming in accordance with section 605 of this Act, prior to expenditure of the funds provided for the hiring of border patrol agents for any other purpose.

While some level of border control is being witnessed on parts of the Southwest border, particularly in San Diego, as a result of increased border patrol agents and technology, in other areas of the country border control remains a growing problem, particularly in the Northwest, Southeast, and other areas of the Southwest border. The House report language regarding consultation and submission of a deployment plan for new border patrol agents and direction in the House report regarding quarterly hiring status reports are adopted by reference. Senate report language prohibiting the transfer of any border patrol agents or technology from the Northwest border to the Southwest border is also adopted by reference.

$598,000 is for replacement patrol boats to combat alien smuggling on the Great Lakes, the Detroit River, Lake St. Clair, and the St. Lawrence Seaway.

$17,500,000 is for the deployment of additional Integrated Surveillance Intelligence Systems (ISIS) along the Northern and Southern borders. When combined with existing base funds, a total of $35,500,000 is available for ISIS. INS is directed to consult with the Committees on Appropriations and provide a deployment plan for these systems no later than December 15, 2001, which reflects the highest priority locations on both the Northern and Southern borders.

$15,737,000 is for additional border patrol equipment and technology. The conference agreement includes a total of $30,737,000 for additional border patrol equipment and technology, of which $15,737,000 is provided as a program increase and $15,000,000 is to be derived from within existing base resources. Funding provided is to be used for high priority equipment, including fiber optic scopes, hand-held search lights, vehicle infrared cameras, Global Positioning Systems, infrared scopes, night vision goggles, handheld range-finder night vision binoculars, and pocket scopes. INS is directed to provide a spending plan for these funds to the Committees on Appropriations no later than December 15, 2000.

$6,277,000, 72 positions and 36 FTE are for additional inspectors at land border Ports of Entry (POE). INS is directed to consult with the Committees on Appropriations and provide a deployment plan no later than December 15, 2000 which reflects the highest priority locations for distribution of these resources.

$7,000,000, 58 positions and 29 FTE are for additional investigators and operational costs associated with INS participation in Joint Terrorism Task Forces to address immigration-related issues in terrorism cases.

Additionally, the conference agreement includes a $1,500,000 increase for the Law Enforcement Support Center (LESC), providing a total of $12,500,000 for the LESC in fiscal year 2001.

The conference agreement adopts by reference the House report language regarding the relocation of Tucson Sector helicopter operations and related housing costs, a joint plan on combating illegal immigration through Federal lands and parks, and establishment of a joint task force to study emergency medical services for illegal aliens.

Interior Enforcement/Removal of Deportable Aliens.—$120,856,000 is provided for interior enforcement, including the tracking, detention, and removal of aliens, as follows:

$87,306,000, 120 positions and 60 FTE are for an additional 1,167 detention beds, including 1,000 beds in State and local facilities, and 120 juvenile detention beds, as proposed in the House report.

$15,550,000 is for additional JPATS movements, as proposed in the House report. The conference agreement does not include the proposed transfer of funds from INS to the JPATS Fund for this activity which was recommended in the Senate report.

$11,000,000, 100 positions and 50 FTE are for 23 additional Quick Response Teams, as proposed in the House report. The House report language regarding consultation and submission of a deployment plan and direction regarding quarterly status reports are adopted by reference.

In addition, the conference agreement includes an additional $3,000,000 under the Community Oriented Policing Services program to expand the program to provide video-teleconferencing equipment and technology to allow State and local law enforcement to confirm the status of an alien suspected of criminal activity.

$3,000,000, 28 positions and 14 FTE are for expansion of the on-going Criminal Alien Apprehension Program (CAAP), pursuant to Public Law 105–141. The Senate report language regarding Salt Lake City is adopted by reference, and INS is directed to report its intention regarding this matter to the Committees on Appropriations no later than December 1, 2000. The House report language regarding consultation and submission of a deployment plan is adopted by reference.

$4,000,000, 26 positions and 13 FTE are for INS to enter INS criminal alien records into the National Criminal Information Center (NCIC) in order to address the current backlog and to ensure that INS does not lose its NCIC privileges. The direction included in the House report regarding development of a comprehensive plan to address this problem is adopted by reference.

Concerns have been expressed regarding the adequacy of the current training course for Detention Enforcement Officers (DEO) in light of the increasingly violent detainee population and other factors. INS is directed to complete a comprehensive assessment of its current DEO training course and provide a report to the Committees on Appropriations no later than July 1, 2001, with recommendations for improvements.

The conference agreement reflects concerns regarding INS' failure to vigorously pursue an effective interior enforcement strategy, and adopts by reference the direction included in the House report regarding quarterly reporting on detention and removal orders. The Senate report language regarding tuberculosis monitoring is also adopted by reference.

Professionalism and Infrastructure.—The conference agreement includes an increase of $1,300,000 for the Debt Management Center, as proposed in the Senate report. INS is expected to follow the direction included in the Senate report regarding annualization of this increase in fiscal year 2002.

IAFIS/IDENT.—The conference agreement adopts the recommendation included in the House report directing that $5,000,000 from within existing INS base funds available for IDENT be transferred to the Justice Management Division to continue the planned IAFIS/IDENT integration project, including systems design and development work and additional operational testing. INS is directed to comply with the direction in the House report regarding further deployment of IDENT.

Within the total amount available to INS, $2,103,000 is to be used to establish the task force required by Public Law 106–215.

Services/Benefits.—The Congress has provided significant additional resources to the INS over the past three years to address the naturalization backlog, improve the integrity of the naturalization process, and improve services. The conference agreement provides a total of $1,004,851,000 for these activities, $70,134,000 (7%) over the amount requested in the budget, and $135,222,000 (16%) over the fiscal year 2000 level. However, serious concerns remain about the INS' failure to manage its resources, and the Committees continue to receive complaints from Members of Congress and their constituents about the problems of backlogs in application processing and casework, and deficiencies in other services. Again this year, the conference agreement includes significant additional resources, over and above the President's budget request, for benefits and services. Therefore, INS is directed to conduct a complete review of staffing and resource needs to improve benefits and services in all current INS offices, as well as the need for additional offices, particularly in rural areas. INS is directed to complete this review and report its findings to the Committees on Appropriations, including a proposal to reallocate resources as warranted, no later than December 15, 2000. As part of this review, the INS is directed to pay particular attention to the following areas: Fort Smith, Arkansas; Adak, Alaska; San Francisco, California; Ventura, California; Washington, D.C.; Des Moines, Iowa; Louisville, Kentucky; the Bronx, New York; New York, New York; Omaha, Nebraska; Northern New Jersey; Las Vegas, NV; Greer, South Carolina; Nashville, Tennessee; Roanoke, Virginia; and Milwaukee, Wisconsin. In addition, the conferees are concerned with the diversion of resources from smaller rural offices and direct INS to notify the Committees prior to the reallocation of resources, including the temporary reassignment of personnel, from the area identified in the Senate report.

The conference agreement adopts by reference the direction included in the House report regarding monthly reports on the status of processing immigration benefits applications, continuation of the San Jose customer service pilot, and a report on unreviewed Citizenship USA cases, which is to be submitted no later than November 1, 2000.

In addition to identical provisions included in both the House bill and the Senate-reported amendment, the conference agreement includes the following additional provisions, as follows: (1) a limitation of $30,000 per individual employee for overtime payments, as proposed in the House bill, instead of $20,000 as proposed in the Senate-reported amendment; (2) a limitation on funding and staffing available to the Offices of Legislative and Public Affairs, as proposed in the House bill; (3) a prohibition on the use of funds to operate the San Clemente and Temecula traffic checkpoints unless certain conditions are met, as proposed in the House bill; and (4) limitations on the number of positions and FTE provided to INS in this Act, modified from language proposed in the House bill.

OFFSETTING FEE COLLECTIONS

The conference agreement assumes $1,549,480,000 will be available from offsetting fee collections, instead of $1,438,812,000 as proposed in the House bill and $1,524,771,000 as proposed in the Senate-reported amendment, to support activities related to the legal admission of persons into the United States. These activities are funded entirely by fees paid by persons who are either traveling internationally or are applying for immigration benefits. The following levels are recommended:

Immigration Inspections User Fees.—The conference agreement includes $494,384,000 of spending from offsetting collections in this account, the same amount proposed in Senate report, and $15,505,000 above the amount included in the House report. This amount represents a $38,999,000 increase over fiscal year 2000 spending, and does not assume the addition of any new or increased fees on airline or cruise ship passengers. The conference agreement includes $18,489,000 for adjustments to base, the full amount requested. In addition, program increases are provided as follows: $12,186,000, 154 positions and 77 FTE to increase primary inspectors at new airport terminals; and $8,324,000 to address additional staffing and other requirements. Funding is not included for the proposed change in the journeyman level for inspectors. INS is directed to consult with Committees on Appropriations and to submit a spending and deployment plan no later than December 1, 2000, which allocates these additional resources to the highest priority locations. Should additional fees become available, the INS may submit a reprogramming in accordance with section 605 of this Act.

Immigration Examinations Fees.—The conference agreement includes a total of $1,004,851,000 to support the adjudication of applications for immigration benefits, instead of $918,717,000 as proposed in the House bill, $841,017,000 as proposed in the Senate-reported amendment, and $934,617,000 as requested in the budget. These funds are derived from offsetting collections in the Examinations Fees account from persons applying for immigration benefits, including collections from a new voluntary premium processing fee as proposed in the House bill and the budget request, and $35,000,000 in continued direct appropriations under the Citizenship and Benefits, Immigration Support, and Program Direction account. The conference agreement reflects the INS' revised revenue estimates for collections from existing fees which is $107,534,000 higher than the amount assumed in the budget request, and $144,534,000 above the amount available in fiscal year 2000. When combined with additional revenues estimated from the new voluntary premium processing fee, the total amount of collections available in the Examinations Fees account for adjudication of immigration benefits is $224,534,000 over the amount available in fiscal year 2000. When combined with direct appropriations, the total amount included in the conference agreement for benefits processing, adjudication, and backlog reduction is an increase of $70,134,000 (7%) above the budget request and $135,222,000 (16%) above the amount provided in fiscal year 2000. Therefore, the conference agreement does not include the reinstatement of section 245(i) as proposed in the Senate-reported amendment. In addition, the conference agreement does not adopt the transfer of $49,741,000 from Examinations Fees funding to the Executive Office of Immigration Review (EOIR); and the transfer of $50,000,000 in non-adjudication related activities from the Salaries and Expenses account to the Examinations Fees account which were proposed in the Senate-reported amendment.

Within the Examinations Fees account, the conference agreement provides the following: $25,676,000 for adjustments to base; and program enhancements totaling $94,841,000, as proposed in the House report, for the following activities: (1) $16,000,000 for implementing premium business service processing; (2) $7,500,000 for anti-fraud investigations related to business-related visa applications and marriage fraud; (3) $13,000,000 for the telephone customer service center, for a total of $43,000,000, the full amount requested; (4) $4,200,000 for the indexing and conversion of INS microfilm images, for a total of $7,200,000; and (5) $53,641,000 for replacement of the case tracking system and hardware in field offices and continued development and installation of digital photography and signature capabilities in the Application Support Centers. Included within these amounts is $6,000,000 for installation of the CLAIMS 4 system in the Los Angeles, California district office which will complete nationwide deployment of the system. INS is directed to submit a spending plan in accordance with the reprogramming procedures set forth in section 605 of this Act which allocates the remaining $51,134,000 in additional resources made available in the Exams Fees account, and the $35,000,000 in continued direct appropriations provided for backlog reduction initiatives.

The INS is directed to make available to EOIR from the INS Examinations Fees account not less than $1,000,000 to be applied toward expenditures related to EQIR's acquisition of contract court interpreter services for immigration court proceedings.

Land Border Inspections Fees.—The conference agreement includes $1,670,000 in spending from the Land Border Inspection Fund, as proposed in the Senate report, instead of $1,641,000 as proposed in the House report. The current revenues generated in this account are from Dedicated Commuter Lanes in Blaine and Port Roberts, Washington, Detroit Tunnel and Ambassador Bridge, Michigan, and Otay Mesa, California, and from Automated Permit Ports that provide pre-screened local border residents' border crossing privileges by means of automated inspections.

Immigration Breached Bond/Detention Fund.—The conference agreement includes $80,600,000 in spending from the Breached Bond/Detention Fund, as proposed in the House report, instead of $130,634,000 as proposed in the Senate report, and reflects the current estimate of revenues available in the Fund in fiscal year 2001 based upon current law. The conference agreement does not assume the reinstatement of Section 245(i), which was proposed in the Senate-reported amendment and the budget request. Instead, the conference agreement provides a $37,480,000 increase in the INS Salaries and Expenses account to fully fund the detention requirements requested in the Fund, but for which revenues are insufficient in fiscal year 2001. The agreement does not include the base transfer to the Breached Bond/Detention Fund account, as proposed in the Senate report.

Immigration Enforcement Fines.—The conference agreement includes $1,850,000 in spending from Immigration Enforcement fines, the amount requested and proposed in the House report, instead of $5,593,000 as proposed in the Senate report.

H–1B Fees.—The conference agreement includes $1,125,000 in spending from the H–1B Fee account, the amount requested and the amount proposed in the House report, instead of $1,473,000 as proposed in the Senate report.

CONSTRUCTION

The conference agreement includes $133,302,000 for construction for INS, as proposed in the Senate-reported amendment, instead of $110,664,000 as proposed in the House bill. This amount fully funds the Administration's request, funds $5,000,000 in habitability, life safety, and other improvements at the Charleston Border Patrol Academy, and provides increases over the requested amount of $7,353,000 for one-time build out and $9,814,000 for maintenance, repair, and alteration to accelerate these programs.

The conference agreement includes language, as proposed in the House bill and carried in prior Appropriations Acts, prohibiting funds from being used for site acquisition, design, or construction of a checkpoint in the Tucson Sector. The Senate-reported amendment did not include a similar provision.

FEDERAL PRISON SYSTEM

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

The conference agreement includes $3,476,889,000 for the salaries and expenses of the Federal Prison System, instead of $3,430,596,000 as proposed in the House bill and $3,573,729,000 as proposed in the Senate-reported amendment. The agreement assumes that, in addition to the amounts appropriated, $31,000,000 will be available for necessary operations from unobligated carryover balances from the prior year.

The conference agreement includes funding to begin and or complete the activation of the following facilities:

The conference agreement provides an additional $500,000 for the National Institute of Corrections (NIC) to study whether the location of illegal alien holding facilities along the Southern border of the United States contributes to the illegal immigration problems in this country. The conference agreement includes $4,000,000 for the NIC to address issues related to children of prisoners, as described in the Senate report. Of the amounts provided, up to $1,000,000 shall be for the NIC to address the issue of staff sexual misconduct involving female inmates as described in the Senate report.

The conference agreement provides $100,000 for implementation of a pilot internship program at the Federal Correctional Institution in Yazoo City, MS as described in the Senate report. The conference agreement adopts the Senate report language directing BOP to continue to assess the feasibility of construction of a high security facility in Yazoo City, MS as described in the Senate report.

The conference agreement includes a $3,000,000 enhancement for education programming instead of the $7,433,000 requested. If additional resources become available either through prior year unobligated balances or as a result of savings in fiscal year 2001, BOP is expected to fund these additional costs.

BUILDINGS AND FACILITIES

The conference agreement includes $835,660,000 for construction, modernization, maintenance and repair of prison and detention facilities housing Federal prisoners, the same level as provided in the House bill, instead of $724,389,000 as provided in the Senate-reported amendment. The conference agreement provides $681,271,000 for construction of new facilities as outlined below:

After reviewing numerous sites in South Carolina, the Bureau of Prisons (BOP) narrowed its focus on four potential locations that would be suitable for the construction of correctional facilities. Following a comprehensive Environmental Impact Study completed in April, 2000, the BOP identified two preferred sites in Williamsburg and Marlboro Counties. A Record of Decision (ROD) for the Salters site, Williamsburg County was signed by the Director, BOP on July 19, 2000. On the same date, the ROD was signed for the Bennetsville site, Marlboro County. The BOP is in the process of procuring a design/build contract for the Salters site and is proceeding with the second preferred site, consistent with the ROD and the fiscal year 2001 request.

The Senate provided $7,954,000 to plan and design a prison in Alaska while the House included no such funding. The managers note that there is no Federal prison in Alaska and State prisons are severely overcrowded and are operating under a court order requiring some prisoners to be transported to lower 48 State prisons. Likewise, Federal prisoners in Alaska must be transported by commercial air to Federal facilities thousands of miles away at a huge cost to taxpayers.

The Director of the Bureau of Prisons is directed to prepare a feasibility study on the need for a new prison in Alaska including the number of Federal prisoners who would be housed, the types of detention, rehabilitation, vocational and educational facilities that would be required, and the potential to lease surplus beds to the State of Alaska to reduce its prison overcrowding. The report should also analyze the costs of construction, the cost savings that would be realized from reduced prisoner transportation costs, and potential financing options, including State contributions and private financing and operation. The managers have provided $500,000 for the study which should be conducted in consultation with the U.S. Marshal for Alaska, the Chief Judge of the United States District Court, the Alaska Commissioner of Corrections and private parties or non-profit corporations with an interest in prison issues. The report should be submitted to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations by March 15, 2001.

FEDERAL PRISON INDUSTRIES, INCORPORATED

(LIMITATION ON ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES)

The conference agreement includes a limitation on administrative expenses of $3,429,000, as requested and as proposed in both the House bill and the Senate-reported amendment.

The conference agreement includes $418,219,000 for Justice Assistance, instead of $307,611,000 as proposed in the House bill and $426,403,000 as proposed in the Senate-reported amendment. The conference agreement includes the following:

National Institute of Justice	$70,000,000

Total, Bureau of Justice Assistance	418,219,000

6. Crime Identification Technology Act Program [CITA].—As included in both the House bill and the Senate-reported amendment, the conference agreement provides $130,000,000 for the CITA program, to be used and distributed pursuant to the Crime Identification Technology Act of 1998, Public Law 105–251. Under that Act, eligible uses of the funds are (1) upgrading criminal history and criminal justice record systems; (2) improvement of criminal justice identification, including fingerprint-based systems; (3) promoting compatibility and integration of national, State, and local systems for criminal justice purposes, firearms eligibility determinations, identification of sexual offenders, identification of domestic violence offenders, and background checks for other authorized purposes; (4) capture of information for statistical and research purposes; (5) developing multi-jurisdictional, multi-agency communications systems; and (6) improvement of capabilities in forensic sciences, including DNA.

Jennifer's Law (P.L. 106–177) authorizes funds for States to apply for competitive grants to cover the costs associated with entering complete files on unidentified victims into the FBI's National Crime Information Center (NCIC). This law provides incentives for States to report to the NCIC information on unidentified, deceased persons and will give law enforcement officials the opportunity to identify missing children who are reported as "unidentified". The conference agreement notes that funding provided under CITA is authorized to fund these costs and encourages States to use CITA funds for this purpose.

Within the amounts provided, the Office of Justice Programs is directed to provide grants to the following:

The conference agreement adopts by reference the Senate report language regarding a competitive grant to a university based technology center.

Upgrade Criminal History Records (Brady Act).—Within the amounts available for crime identification technology, the conference agreement provides $35,000,000 for States to upgrade criminal history records so that these records can interface with other databases holding information on other categories of individuals who are prohibited from purchasing firearms under Federal or State statute. Additionally, the national sexual offender registry (NSOR) component of the Criminal History Records Upgrade Program has two principal objectives. The registry assists States in developing complete and accurate in-State registries. It will also assist States in sharing their registry information with the FBI system which identifies those offenders for whom special law enforcement interest has been noted.

DNA Backlog Grants/Crime Laboratory Improvement Program (CLIP).—Within the amounts available for crime identification technology, the conference agreement includes $30,000,000 for grants to reduce DNA backlogs and for the Crime Laboratory Improvement Program (CLIP). The $75,000,000 is to be used exclusively for community prosecutors to prosecute cases involving violent crimes committed with guns, and violations of gun statutes in cases involving drug trafficking and gang-related crime in high gun violence areas. The Department of Justice is directed to submit a report to the Committees on Appropriations by December 15, 2000, outlining how the $75,000,000 for community prosecutors in high gun violence areas will be spent. The report shall include but not be limited to the following information: (1) a definition of a high gun violence area; (2) the amount of funding per prosecutor that will be provided; and (3) an explanation of how local communities will be able to continue to employ the prosecutors that are hired after the grant has expired.

8. Offender Reentry.—In recognition of the public safety issues generated by the increasing number of offenders who have served their sentences and are returning from jails and prisons to our communities, the conference agreement includes $30,000,000 for the law enforcement costs related to establishing offender reentry programs. The House bill did not include funding for this program and the Senate-reported amendment included $7,000,000 for this program within State Prison Grants.

Offender reentry programs establish partnerships among institutional corrections, community corrections, social services programs, community policing and community leaders to prepare for more successful returns of inmates to their home neighborhoods. The $30,000,000 provided is intended to fund law enforcement participation and coordination of offender reentry programs. These funds are not provided to teach job training skills or provide alcohol or drug abuse treatment. The Department of Justice is directed to submit an implementation plan to the Committees on Appropriations by December 15, 2000, outlining how the funds will be spent. The conference agreement includes the understanding that changes to Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Programs are being considered in the reauthorization of the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Act of 1974. However, absent completion of this reauthorization process, the conference agreement provides funding consistent with the current Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act. The conference agreement includes language that provides that funding for these programs shall be subject to the provisions of any subsequent authorization legislation that is enacted.

Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention.—Of the total amount provided, $279,097,000 is for grants and administrative expenses for Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention programs including:

The construction and tenant build-out costs for this facility are to be funded by the General Services Administration (GSA), not the Census Bureau, and the conference agreement includes new language prohibiting Census Bureau funds from being used for these purposes. Language is also included, as proposed in the Senate-reported amendment, requiring quarterly reports from the Census Bureau and GSA on this project.

National Telecommunications and Information Administration

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

The conference agreement includes $11,437,000 for the salaries and expenses of the National Telecommunications and Information Administration (NTIA) as provided in the Senate-reported amendment, instead of $10,975,000 as proposed in the House bill. Senate report language regarding proposals for several grant programs is not included in the conference agreement. House report language regarding telecommunications research is included by reference.

Patent and Trademark Office

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

The conference agreement provides a total funding level of $1,038,732,000 for the Patent and Trademark Office (PTO) as proposed in the Senate-reported amendment and requested in the budget, instead of $904,924,000 as proposed in the House bill. Of the amount provided in the conference agreement, $783,843,000 is to be derived from fiscal year 2001 offsetting fee collections, and $254,889,000 is to be derived from carryover of prior year fee collections. This amount represents an increase of $167,732,000, or 19 percent, above the fiscal year 2000 operating level for the PTO. The PTO has experienced significant growth in recent years due to increased application filings for patents and trademarks, and funding is provided to address these increased filings.

The conference agreement includes bill language limiting the amount of carryover that may be obligated in fiscal year 2001, as proposed in the House bill.

The conference agreement includes House report language concerning PTO's partnership with the National Inventor's Hall of Fame and Inventure Place, and Senate report language concerning the official insignias of Native American Tribes, and agency budget forecasts.

In addition, the conference agreement includes funding for the Physics program as referenced in the Senate report. Of the funding provided for Computer Science and Applied Mathematics, $3,000,000 is for expert review teams, and $4,000,000 is for internal critical infrastructure protection activities. Funding is included for the Building and Fire Program at $1,192,000 above the budget request, and $2,000,000 is to continue the disaster research program on effects of windstorms on protective structures and other technologies begun in fiscal year 1998. A total of $282,000 is authorized to be transferred to the NIST working capital fund, as referenced in the House bill instead of $6,200,000 as referenced in the Senate-reported amendment. Language regarding the placement of NIST personnel overseas is included as in the House report.

Funding of $5,000,000 is provided for a new program to award research grants for critical infrastructure protection. NIST is required to submit an implementation plan for this new, competitive grant program, prior to obligation of funding.

INDUSTRIAL TECHNOLOGY SERVICES

The conference agreement includes $250,837,000 for the NIST external research account, instead of $104,836,000 as proposed in the House bill, and $262,737,000 as proposed in the Senate-reported amendment.

Manufacturing Extension Partnership Program.—The conference agreement includes $105,137,000 for the Manufacturing Extension Partnership Program (MEP), instead of $104,836,000 as proposed in the House bill, and $109,137,000 as proposed in the Senate-reported amendment. The conference agreement incorporates direction in the Senate report that the Northern Great Plains Initiative e-commerce project should assist small manufacturers with marketing and business development purposes in rural areas.

Advanced Technology Program.—The conference agreement includes $145,700,000 for the Advanced Technology Program (ATP), instead of $153,600,000 as proposed in the Senate-reported amendment, and no funding as proposed in the House bill. The amount of carryover funding available in fiscal year 2001 is $45,000,000, providing total available funding of $190,700,000 for fiscal year 2001.

The recommendation provides the following: (1) $84,800,000 for continued funding requirements for awards made in fiscal years 1996, 1997, 1998, 1999, and 2000; (2) $60,700,000 for new awards in fiscal year 2001; and (3) $45,200,000 for administration, internal NIST lab support and Small Business Innovation Research requirements.

The conference agreement includes bill language, modified from the Senate language, designating $60,700,000 for new ATP awards.

CONSTRUCTION OF RESEARCH FACILITIES

The conference agreement provides $34,879,000 for construction, renovation and maintenance of NIST facilities, instead of $26,000,000 as proposed in the House bill, and $28,879,000 as proposed in the Senate-reported amendment.

Of the amount provided, $14,000,000 is for grants and cooperative agreements as referenced in Section 209 of this Act; and $20,879,000 is for safety, capacity, maintenance, and repair projects at NIST, including funding to address electrical service issues at NIST's Boulder campus.

The conference agreement does not include language proposed in the House bill designating the amounts provided under this account for the six NOAA lines offices. The Senate-reported amendment contained no similar provision.

The conference agreement includes language, similar to language proposed in the House bill and carried since the 1999 Appropriations Act, designating the amount available for Executive Direction and Administration and prohibiting augmentation of specified offices through formal or informal personnel details, transfers, or reimbursements above 42 personnel. The Senate-reported amendment contained no such provision.

The conference agreement includes language proposed in the House bill making the use of deobligated balances subject to standard reprogramming procedures. NOAA is directed that any use of deobligations above $16,650,000 is subject to the procedures set forth in section 605 of this Act. In addition, the conference agreement includes House bill language limiting administrative charges assessed on assigned activities, as in the current year. The Senate-reported amendment included no similar provisions.

The conference agreement does not include language in the Senate-reported amendment regarding lawsuits. The House bill did not address this matter.

The conference agreement does not include $34,000,000 in controversial new fisheries and navigation safety fees that were proposed in the budget request. House and Senate report language regarding these fees is incorporated by reference.

The conference agreement does not include a provision, as proposed in the Senate-reported amendment, permitting the Secretary to have NOAA occupy and operate research facilities at Lafayette, Louisiana.

The following table reflects the distribution of the funds provided in this conference agreement.

House report language with respect to the Southwest Border is adopted by reference.

An April 2000 review of Federal judges sharing of courtrooms prepared by the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) indicated that courtroom sharing by judges should not cause trial delays for a significant number of trials, and that for the few that might be delayed the waiting time would be less than half a day. The CBO study also found that many courtrooms are in use for a small percentage of the available workdays. A study of the Judiciary's space and facilities program recently completed by Ernst and Young, however, suggested that requiring judges to share courtrooms is not practical. The Ernst and Young report stated that current court records do not adequately track courtroom usage, making it difficult to determine if courtroom sharing by Federal judges is a viable option. The conference agreement directs CBO to review and comment on the Ernst and Young report, and to provide the Committees on Appropriations with its findings no later than February 1, 2001. The Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts shall provide such assistance as may be necessary to CBO to complete its review. This issue is of great importance because any reduction in the number of courtrooms and associated court space could significantly reduce rental payments, which continue to consume an inordinate amount of the Judiciary's available resources.

VACCINE INJURY COMPENSATION TRUST FUND

The conference agreement provides $2,602,000 from the Vaccine Injury Compensation Trust Fund for expenses associated with the National Childhood Vaccine Injury Act of 1986 as provided in the Senate-reported amendment, instead of $2,600,000 as provided in the House bill.

The conference agreement directs that a portion of the funds made available be used for an increase to $75 an hour for in-court time and $55 an hour for out-of-court time for Criminal Justice Act panel attorneys.

Language relating to capital habeas corpus costs in the House report is adopted by reference.

FEES OF JURORS AND COMMISSIONERS
